ACCUSED THEM AS WITCHES.

Two Columbia Professors Summoned to Court on an Eccentric's Charge.

A man who gave his name as Samuel Goldberg got a summons for Prof. Charles F. Chandler and Prof. Pupin of Columbia University in the Tombs Court, and Prof. Chandler was before Magistrate Finn in response to it yesterday. Lyman Settel, a lawyer representing Goldberg, handed the Magistrate an affidavit from Goldberg, in which the two professors were accused of "working on him through occult agencies" and "that they had beaten and whipped him by wireless telegraphy."

"Why, man, you're crazy, aren't you?" asked the court, after it had read the affidavit.

"I don't think so. I demand justice here," said Goldberg.

"Are you sure this is the man you want?" asked the Magistrate again.

"I'm not quite sure," replied Goldberg.

"Get out of here," ordered the court, as a court officer caught Goldberg by the arm and led him away.

Magistrate Finn said afterward that he should have sent Goldberg to Bellevue.

DELAHUNTY SAYS HE HID CANFIELD'S PAPERS

Took Them to Jersey City and Then to Stamford.

WORTH MORE THAN $500,000

Gambler's Former Attorney Says Secrecy Was of Vital Importance to His Client.

Interesting revelations are expected when the actions brought by John Delahunty against Richard Canfield, the gambler, come to trial. Canfield's new attorneys, Curtis, Arms & Keenan of Binghamton, N. Y., yesterday obtained from Justice Forbes in the Supreme Court at Canastota, N. Y., an order staying all proceedings in the Delahunty suits pending an appeal which Canfield has made from the decision of the court here, which refused to grant Canfield's request to consolidate the two Delahunty suits.

But before the stay of proceedings was issued up the State yesterday Delahunty served on the defendant's attorneys a bill of particulars. This bill refers to many of the things that Delahunty as legal adviser did for Canfield when Canfield and his confidential man, David W. Bucklin, were hard pressed by District Attorney Jerome. Delahunty at that time was acting as Canfield's attorney, and sued in two actions for a total of $59,594 for legal services.

In answering, Canfield set up a counterclaim for $19,000 which he advanced to Delahunty, but Delahunty declares that the advances were repaid before he began his two suits.

Delahunty in his bill of particulars tells how he was sent for in a hurry and lost no time in reaching Canfield's place on East Forty-fourth Street on Dec. 1, 1902. Upon arriving there he had a conference with David W. Bucklin and Canfield in view of "an expected invasion of the place by District Attorney Jerome and his assistants with force of arms." And further that he (Delahunty) held a conference with the District Attorney after Mr. Jerome arrived and went through Canfield's house with Mr. Jerome, and remained in the place until the raid was over, at 2 o'clock in the morning.

Continuing, Delahunty refers to his services in resisting Mr. Jerome's efforts to obtain Canfield's books, papers, and securities, which were in the vaults of the Fifth Avenue Safe Deposit Company. The papers included negotiable securities worth more than $500,000 and checks and "other obligations taken by Canfield in the course of business, the production of which books and papers and securities it was of the utmost value to Canfield to avoid."

Delahunty says that he took "physical possession" of all of these papers and deposited them safely in a safe deposit vault in New Jersey, where they were out of the reach of Mr. Jerome.

This fortune in negotiable paper and securities had not been in New Jersey long when the Chief of Police of Jersey City inquired about them. But Delahunty carried the papers across the North River and up to Stamford, Conn., where he handed them to Bucklin, Canfield's manager. Continuing, Delahunty says:

"The proceedings taken by me on my own responsibility resulted in the saving to you, (Canfield,) undisturbed, of securities of upward of half a million dollars, and the placing of the same where they were subject to your own control, absolutely without public display of the same, which was of vital importance for your protection and for the protection of your business."

SUES SHOE COMPANY.

Court Asked to Stop Use of Machines and Award Damages.

A suit in equity was started in the United States Circuit Court here yesterday against the United Shoe Machinery Company of New Jersey, a thirty-five-million-dollar corporation, by Robert C. Beatty, as receiver for the Goodyear Shoe Machinery Company of Portland, Me. Mr. Beatty asks for an injunction restraining the use of certain patented shoe machinery and for $150,000 damages.

Mr. Beatty was recently appointed receiver of the Goodyear concern at the instance of the administrator of the estate of Christian Dancel, an inventor, who recently got judgment against the Goodyear concern for $88,028 for royalties due. The bill of complaint alleges that in 1900 the Goodyear concern assigned to the United Company without consideration many patented shoe machines, and that the United Company leased these machines out to other concerns.

VANDERBILT DRIVER HELD.

Says Car Cannot Run Less Than Thirty Miles an Hour.

Charged with speeding up Seventh Avenue at the rate of forty miles an hour, Henri Dailloux, a chauffeur, employed by William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., was arraigned in the West Side Court yesterday and held in $300 bail for trial by Magistrate Crane.

"You seem to have no regard for life or limb," said the Magistrate. "Three months in prison would do you good, and I would like to see such a sentence imposed."

The driver said that his machine was incapable of going under thirty miles an hour, and that it was impossible for him to avoid breaking the law.

"Then it is an outrage that such a machine should be brought into a city," the court responded.

A saloon keeper furnished bail for Dailloux.

NAN PATTERSON NOT YET FREE

Her Release Depends on Disposal of J. Morgan Smith Cases.

Nan Patterson is still in the Tombs and is likely to stay there for several days. Her lawyers have abandoned all effort to secure her release until Mr. Jerome is ready to act. The law gives the District Attorney two months to decide whether the girl is to be tried again or not.

The possibility of Nan Patterson's retrial or release is said to depend on the action of the courts in the case of the J. Morgan Smiths, who are still in the Tombs, although Judge Foster last week issued an order dismissing the conspiracy indictment against them. It was said about the District Attorney's office yesterday that the Grand Jury may be asked to reconsider the evidence against them with a view to a new indictment.

Negro Dies After a Saloon Fight.

Sterling Gardiner, a negro from Haverstraw, N. Y., died at Roosevelt Hospital yesterday from bullet and knife wounds received in a saloon fight in Weehawken Monday night. In a statement made to the Coroner at the hospital Gardiner said he did not know who had inflicted the wounds. The first seen of him by the police was when he fainted on a ferryboat from Weehawken.

DODGE-MORSE CASES TO-DAY.

Abraham Hummel Likely to be First of the Indicted Ones Tried.

The long-delayed trials of persons indicted in connection with the Dodge-Morse divorce trouble are about to begin. Ex-Justice Edgar T. Fursman, Jr., Lawyer Abraham Hummel, and Lawyer Benjamin Steinhardt will appear this morning with their counsel before Justice Davy in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court, when dates for their trials will be set.

"Mr. Hummel will have the privilege of being tried first," said District Attorney Jerome yesterday.

There is a blanket indictment charging these three defendants, as well as Charles F. Dodge—the principal witness in the case—and a private detective named Edward T. Bracken, who is still at large, with conspiracy in securing an annullment of Mrs. Dodge's divorce from her first husband. Against Hummel and Steinhardt additional indictments are pending, charging them with subornation of perjury. Hummel probably will be tried first on the conspiracy charge, as the disposal of that charge would practically settle the same charge against the others.

The lawyers in the cases are ex-Judge D. Cady Herrick, for Fursman; De Lancey Nicoll and John D. Lindsay, for Hummel, and John R. Dos Passos, for Steinhardt.

AWAIT MR. MORGAN'S RETURN.

Factions In Lying-In Hospital Will Then End Dispute.

Frederick Delano Weekes, who for more than sixteen years had been identified with the Society of the Lying-In Hospital of the City of New York, resigned as its Secretary and Treasurer in April. An attempt is making to connect his leaving office with what is known as the "Markoe feud," a situation that for some time has been tense because of the resolve of certain Directors who are classed as acting in accord with J. Pierpont Morgan, the chief benefactor of the model hospital at Second Avenue and Seventeenth Street, to support the Medical Director, Dr. J. W. Markoe, against all opposition.

It is said that whatever tangle there may be in the affairs of the Lying-In Hospital will be adjusted on the return from Europe of Mr. Morgan and the Superintendent of the Hospital, Dr. W. H. Spiller. Ways and means will also be dealt with, as the institution's usefulness is impaired by lack of adequate funds to accommodate patients to its full capacity, 200. Yesterday 95 women were in the hospital.

WIRETAPPING GAME AGAIN.

Grocer Says That He Lost $7,000—Has Three Rearrested.

Alleging the larceny of $8,000 through one of the time-worn "wiretapping" games to "beat" the horse races, John F. Kuhne, a well-to-do grocer, living at 208 West One Hundred and Fifth Street, with a large store at 2,787 Broadway, caused the rearrest, in the Tombs Court yesterday afternoon, of three of four men who were arrested on Friday last on a similar charge made by Arthur Whipple, an Englishman visiting in New York, who said he had been victimized by them.

Whipple did not appear to press his complaint at the adjourned examination of the prisoners yesterday, and the complaint, by consent of Assistant District Attorney Corrigan, was dismissed. The prisoners were about to leave the court room when three of them were rearrested on Kuhne's complaint. All were held for examination Friday. They described themselves as Frank H. Chase, George Martin, and John J. Murcia. For $2,000 mentioned in the complaint, Kuhne says that he lost $4,000 on another occasion.

HAD $500; NONE FOR WIFE.

Went to the Island Rather Than Give Her $5 a Week.

Abraham Shotosky, thirty-six years old, of 79 Chrystie Street, went to Blackwell's Island yesterday morning rather than furnish a bond to support his wife, although at the time he had on his person $500.

Shotosky, when arrested and searched, was found to have the money concealed in a sweater which he wore. When the prisoner was arraigned in the Essex Market Court Magistrate Barlow gave him the opportunity of furnishing a bond to pay his wife $3 a week or go to the Island for six months. Shotosky chose to go to the Island.

LAST OF CHINATOWN RAID.

Mr. Lord Says Eggers's Men Should Be Charged with Assault.

Magistrate Moss, in the Tombs Court, yesterday discharged twenty Chinamen, the last of 180 taken in various raids Easter morning. District Attorney Jerome had told the Magistrate that if he did not think the prisoners could be convicted it was his duty to free them. Separate charges preferred against some of the prisoners by Acting Capt. Eggers's detectives also failed and Assistant District Attorney Lord, after hearing the testimony, remarked:

"These officers should be charged with assault and not the Chinamen."

BREAK WITH SENATE FACED BY PRESIDENT

Taft's Warning to Elkins Committee to Draft Rate Law.

HINT OF REBUKE TO MORTON

Debate at Railway Congress Dinner Stirs Interest in Coming Legislation.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 10.—The foreshadowing of a conflict between President Roosevelt and the Senate at the proposed extra session over rate legislation was the one topic in official circles to-day, and put more than usual interest for the closed season into political gossip at the capital.

Furthermore, indications of divided opinion in the Cabinet are found in the discordant views expressed by Secretary Paul Morton last Thursday, and Secretary Taft last evening, before the same hearers, the delegates to the International Railway Congress.

The President's Denver speech, which was reported in the newspapers here yesterday, and Secretary Taft's address last evening sounded the same keynote.

No one supposes that the coincidence of the speeches was prearranged, but no less significance is attached.

Mr. Taft was invited to the dinner in his capacity as head of the Government in Mr. Roosevelt's absence. He told the assembled railway men of this country, in the presence of their foreign guests, that they must accept rate regulation or find cause to regret it. By his drawing as answer from Stuyvesant Fish on behalf of the railroads and then replying to Mr. Fish, the effect was to turn the banquet into a joint debate on the subject of a declared policy of the Administration.

Secretary Morton, another member of the Administration, in welcoming the delegates to the congress here last Thursday, had given a view so opposite as to be in line with the utterances of Mr. Fish last night. He had argued that if discrimination were done away with, rates would take care of themselves. Mr. Fish apparently used Mr. Morton's words as the foundation of his argument in his two speeches answering Mr. Taft.

If the President's and Mr. Taft's speeches had been intended as a rebuke to Mr. Morton, devised to clear the Administration of any suspicion that it agreed with him, a more complete method could not have been found, is the opinion expressed here to-day.

The views of Mr. Fish, the railroad men generally, and of Secretary Morton are those of the Senators on Mr. Elkins's committee which has been for some time conducting an investigation into the ratemaking question. The committee, it is understood, is utterly hostile to any such legislation as the Esch-Townsend bill. It is credited with killing that bill in the last Congress. The result of its investigation, therefore, has been discounted, and not much interest has been taken in it.

The committee will frame a bill, but the expectation is that it will in no respect resemble what the President wants. The committee expects to adjourn on May 20. The speeches of the President and Mr. Taft are taken here as a direct warning to the committee. Some of Mr. Taft's significant sentences follow:

"What the railway men of this country ought to do is to assist in the passage of a law that will accomplish the result. It is not an easy law to draw, but if they will stand up and assist they will take away from the extreme feeling which exists against the railroads.

"I am the last one to argue in favor of Government ownership. I think nothing could come to this country that would be so unfortunate in its effect as the Government ownership of steam railroads. And we are not going to come to it, but we may have a campaign on this subject which will do no good to the railroads.

"It is true that the railroads have been guilty of some abuses and I say this because I have run railroads for ten years in courts as a judge through receivers. And it was mighty hard sometimes to get receivers who would not cut rates. I had to stand them up at the end of every week and swear them to be sure and then I was not quite sure that they were not cutting rates.

"Most railroads to-day are prosperous, and when they are prosperous they can obey the law; but when it comes to a question of the survival of the fittest, then the weakest begin to break the law, and that leads all the others in the same direction. What we want is a law that will enable the railroads that wish to obey the law to compel the others to do so or else go out of business.

"I heard the other night a speech from a gentleman whom I very much admire, an old friend of mine, President Baer, and I thought his tone, his attitude toward regulation, was one that was likely to lead the railroads into a position from which they must some time sorrowfully retire."

When Mr. Fish maintained that the law was ample and that administration rather than legislation was the thing desired Mr. Taft retorted:

"I know something about the Inter-State Commerce litigation. I know you began a case four years ago over an issue whether a particular town was prejudiced as to the way in which the rates were made for that town and five years hence the case is decided in the courts. In the meantime the town has been wiped out by a tornado."

If, despite these warnings, the Senate persists in the course foreshadowed by Mr. Elkins's committee, lively times are looked for in the extra session. The House, under Speaker Cannon's lead, is counted with the President. The passage of such a bill as Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Taft have indicated they do not want will place the President in the situation which Mr. Cleveland confronted when Congress passed the Wilson-Gorman Tariff bill. Mr. Cleveland branded it as one of "perfidy and dishonor," but preferred to allow it to become a law rather than veto the only tariff bill he could get.

FIRE ON A FERRYBOAT.

Passengers Ignorant, Though It Burns Half an Hour.

The ferryboat Hackensack of the College Point line on its 6 o'clock trip last night had reached the very spot where on a June morning last year nearly 1,000 persons met death in the General Slocum fire, when Capt. Helgerson, the Hackensack commander, discovered that the entire port side of his pilot house was in flames.

There was the usual rush hour crowd on board the ferryboat, but Capt. Helgerson and his crew of six handled the situation with such coolness and presence of mind that though it took half an hour to put the fire out, the flames being visible from the shore, not a single passenger was aware that anything out of the ordinary was going on aboard the boat.

A spark from the fireboat Zophar Mills is believed to have set fire to the ferryboat. The Fire Department craft lay moored alongside the ferry slip at Ninety-ninth Street and the East River, where the ferryboats of the College Point line have their southern terminal. Shortly after 5:30 o'clock the Zophar Mills received an alarm for a fire at One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Street and the Harlem River. The blowers of the fireboat were opened as she headed for the scene in response to the summons under a double head of steam, and showers of sparks poured from her funnels. The wind was from the south at the time and blew the sparks directly on the decks of the Hackensack as the fireboat steamed up the river.

A few minutes later the ferryboat started on her trip for College Point. She made her slip, at the foot of East One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Street, as usual. Her next stop is at College Point. Both Capt. Helgerson and his pilot, Capt. Hartman, were in the pilot house when off the Harlem Kills the Captain noticed an odor of burning wood. Then he saw tiny wreaths of smoke curling from the crevices on the port side of the pilot house. Seizing a fire hatchet, he chopped loose a board or two from the partition, and a sheet of flame belched forth.

Taking the wheel from the pilot, the Captain ordered him to go down to the quarters of the crew and assemble them quietly without giving them any information of the danger. Then Capt. Helgerson communicated through the speaking tube with the engineer and told him to put on a double head of steam.

By the time the crew reached the upper deck the side of the pilot house was a mass of flames, and Capt. Helgerson was almost smothered where he stood at the wheel, intent upon keeping the boat to its course among the dangerous shoals. The crew tackled the flames with the fire buckets.

In the dusk several of the nurses on North Brother Island saw the fire and smoke from the ferryboat, and no time was lost in making the Health Department tender, the Franklin Edson, ready. While she was speeding to the ferryboat's assistance the crew made ready the fire-fighting apparatus aboard, but before the tug reached the Hackensack the fire on the ferryboat was under control. The port side of the pilot house was almost completely burned away.

COUNT CZAYKOWSKI ACCUSED.

Diplomat Who Married Depew's Ward Was Arrested in Paris.

PARIS, May 10.—Count Czaykowski, who last November was legally separated from his wife, who was Miss Edith L. Collins of New York, was recently arrested, charged with obtaining money under false pretenses from Patusset & Loiser, bankers of this city.

The bankers allege that the Count secured an advance from them in order that he might proceed to the United States and claim $20,000,000 which, he said, he had inherited from a Boston relative named Clarke. Patusset & Loiser say they received in repayment from a Boston lawyer a check for $4,000 drawn on an American banking concern, but when it was presented payment was found to have been stopped.

When urged to pay them, they allege, Count Czaykowski proposed that M. Patusset accompany him to America as adviser, promising him a substantial recompence. M. Patusset agreed to do this, the bankers aver, but as the Count demanded a further advance and delayed his departure the charge against him was brought.

Count Czaykowski was released on bail. It is said the Turkish Embassy intervened, and that the Sultan ordered the Count to return to Turkey, where he now is.

Miss Edith L. Collins, daughter of Clarence L. Collins of New York City and at one time ward of Senator Depew, was married to Count Czaykowski, who is also known as Rechid Bey, in Paris on Jan. 7, 1897.

The Count, who is of Polish descent, is a Turkish subject, and is in the Turkish diplomatic service, and at the time of his marriage it was believed that a brilliant career was in prospect for him.

Last November the First Tribunal of the Seine heard the suit of the Countess for separation from her husband. She won the suit, and also obtained the custody of her children. The Count alleged that the Turkish law gave him control of the children, but the court sustained the plea of the Countess that the Turkish law could not be applied to parties residing outside Turkey.

The Count is said to be a favorite of the Sultan of Turkey.

LAWSON WINS SUIT.

Wouldn't Let Fuller Stop Case Till His Lawyers Got $11,000.

BOSTON, May 10.—Thomas W. Lawson to-day turned the tables on Paul Fuller of New York, who sued him for $225,000 for default in subscription to the stock of the Keon Incandescent Lighting Company of New Jersey. The New York lawyers wanted to call the suit off in the Supreme Court to-day, but Mr. Lawson would not consent to it till the New Yorkers turned over $11,000 to be divided among his lawyers.

Lawson entered with a two-hundred-and-twenty-five-thousand-dollar subscription for stock of the Keon Company and paid in $25,000. Then he refused to take up the rest of the subscription, contending that matters pertaining to the company had been misrepresented to him.

500 REPORTED KILLED BY OKLAHOMA STORM

Town of Snyder, Okla., Is Said to Have Been Wiped Out.

ALL THE WIRES ARE DOWN

Relief Expeditions Being Sent—News of the Disaster Comes from Various Points.

FORT WORTH, Texas, Thursday, May 11.—Reports over railroad wires to Fort Worth say dispatches from Snyder, Oklahoma, to train dispatchers of the 'Frisco Road at Sapulpa, I. T., report that a tornado struck Snyder last night, wrecking the town and killing 500 people, and relief is asked for.

A message to a train dispatcher sent by The Fort Worth Record asking for information has been answered as follows:

"We have same report and are sending relief on the supposition that it is true. Wires all down."

The telegraph operator at Chickasaw states that he talked over the telephone with Hobart, Oklahoma, near Snyder, and that all the wires in the vicinity of Snyder are down, but relief trains are being sent from several directions.

Snyder is a town of 1,000 people, in Kiowa County, Oklahoma, located on the Frisco Railroad, forty-five miles north of Vermont.

SAPULPA, I.T., Thursday, May 11.—1:30 A. M.—At 11:40 last night the dispatcher for the 'Frisco in this city read a report from Enid, I. T., stating that a tornado had struck Snyder, Oklahoma, wrecking the town and killing 500 people, among whom was the station agent of the 'Frisco. Assistance was requested.

On the strength of the report the dispatcher ordered that relief trains with physicians be sent from Chickasha, I. T., and Guanah, Texas.

The wire between Snyder and Sapulpa went down about 10 P. M.

GUTHRIE, Oklahoma, Thursday, May 11.—Telephone reports from Hobart, Oklahoma, indicate that the entire town of Snyder, Oklahoma, has been destroyed by a tornado.

A train of doctors, nurses, and other assistants is said to have left Hobart for Snyder.

The wires are reported down between Snyder and other neighboring towns, and all news is being received from Hobart.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Thursday, May 11.—Reports have just reached here from Hobart and Anadarko confirming the news of a tornado at Snyder, but no details are known.

The Frisco Railroad is sending a relief train from Chickasha to Snyder.

It is rumored that 400 people are killed or injured.

HE FLED THE HEROES.

"Carnegie Agent" with Real Money Visited Police, Then Ran.

Sergt. Robinson was busying himself at the Tenderloin Police Station with a fat cigar last night, while a dozen newspaper men and half as many detectives lounged about, waiting patiently for something to turn up.

The clock had just struck 11:30 when the door opened and in rushed a man, in an apparently excited state of mind. He was a distinguished looking personage. His unusual height was accentuated by a high silk hat, and an iron-gray Van Dyke beard helped to make him a man to be noticed. In one hand he carried a red-leather memorandum book, while beneath the thumb of the hand which held the book was a stack of bills, all of the yellow-backed variety.

The reporters gathered round as the newcomer halted before the Sergeant's desk. Then with care he counted out ten $100 bills. The reporters and detectives gathered closer.

"Sergeant," the man said, "I represent the Carnegie Hero Fund, and I'm looking for Officer—let me see." Turning to the second page of his book, which was covered with names, he ran his finger down the column and stopped after passing a dozen.

Then, without a word more, he snatched up his thousand dollars, pushed them with his book in his pocket and bolted out into the night as mysteriously as he had entered. Reporters and detectives rushed after, but he disappeared in the direction of Sixth Avenue.

Now the all-absorbing question at the West Thirtieth Street Station is: "Who is the hero?"

LAWSON TO FETTERED KANSAS

In a 547-Word Telegram, Prepaid, He Consents to Speak.

Special to The New York Times.

TOPEKA, Kan., May 10.—Thomas W. Lawson will make an address at the Ottawa (Kan.) Chautauqua July 7 or 8. Gov. Hoch received a telegram containing 547 words from Lawson this morning saying either of these dates would be acceptable to him.

Mr. Lawson prepaid his telegram. He began his telegram by saying: "My Dear Gov. Hoch: Let me assure you that no citizen of Kansas desires to hear me as much as I hanker to have him listen. I am no public speaker. I have never delivered a public address in my life, and nothing would induce me to do this but my sense of duty to my country and this section of its people, who had the courage to throw their fortunes and their lives in the pathway of the most brutally ruthless band of brigands that ever plundered or desolated the homes of a free people. In my humble way I will try to point out the way to strike the fetters from their

$5,000 THEFT IN HOTEL.

Family in Europe—Paintings Cut from Frames.

Two arrests were made last night for a $5,000 robbery in the Hotel Patterson, at 58 West Forty-seventh Street. The apartments of David C. Townsend, a Maiden Lane diamond importer, who is in Europe with his family, were robbed.

Two oil paintings were cut from their frames and jewels and other valuables were stolen. John Crawley, a watchman in the hotel, and George Sears, an elevator man, were arrested "on suspicion."

On the night of the robbery Delia Monahan, long an employe of the Townsends, went out for a visit. She hid bric-a-brac and jewelry valued at $10,000 in a front room before she went out. When she returned, according to the detectives, she saw a light in the apartment, which she had left dark.

The police say that she asked Crawley, the watchman of the hotel, to go up to the apartment, which is on the sixth floor. She said that Crawley made excuses and detained her. When they did go up the light was out. The police version of the woman's story continues:

"Two fine oil paintings had been neatly cut from their heavy gold frames and a search of the rooms revealed the fact that a systematic search had been made. She noticed that most of the heavy plate and many articles of virtu were missing. She was unable to give any estimate of their value, and practically only knew that they were missing by noting that they were not in their customary places.

"We found out that Lewis, who had never asked for a night off since he had been employed in the hotel, had been off that night. We found that he and Crawley were all the time together when they were off.

"The cabinet had not been discovered by the thieves, whoever they were."

36 HOURS ADRIFT IN SLOOP.

Four Men Half Famished When Rescued on Great South Bay.

After thirty-six hours of terror in a frail sloop on the Great South Bay, Eugene R. Smith, a civil engineer of Islip, L. I.; John Sweesey, his assistant, and two other men were rescued yesterday afternoon and brought ashore in a half famished condition.

Smith, who knows more about engineering than sailing a boat, had been employed by Josiah Robbins, a Bay Shore merchant, to survey some property on Fire Island. Though a high wind was lashing the bay into a fury, he loaded his implements on the little sloop Fannie S., and with his three companions set out for Fire Island at 5 o'clock on Tuesday morning. When the sloop was half way across the Great South Bay, the wind freshened. Smith and his companions, with only deficient knowledge of seamanship, did not know enough to bring her to the wind and take in a reef in her sails, and soon the frail craft under full canvas scudded before the high wind with the helmsman unable to make her obey the rudder.

Soon the men found themselves at the mercy of the waves. The wind had torn their sails into tatters, and thus removed a danger which they had been unable to forestall themselves. The boat drifted toward the dangerous surf on the Fire Island shoal, and only by energetic plying of the oars were the luckless mariners able to keep her clear of the zone of dangerous breakers until Mr. Robbins, who, with several men, had spent the entire night in search on his power launch, succeeded in finding the ill-fated party and bringing them to land. The merchant had telephoned to Fire Island, and, learning that they had not reached land, organized a relief party.

The rescue was witnessed by several women relatives of the shipwrecked men who had been walking to and fro on the shore with the wave-tossed sloop in full view, but unable to go to her rescue.

ACID DASHED IN GIRL'S FACE.

Police Puzzled by Strange Attack on Miss Meyersburg.

The face of Julia Meyersburg, twenty-five years old, a daughter of Dr. A. G. Meyersburg of East New York, was badly burned last night by carbolic acid flung at her by a person unknown to the police in Bradford Street.

Miss Meyersburg had been shopping. She returned home in a Fulton Avenue car and alighted at Bradford Street, along which she was walking, when opposite a vacant lot at 96 she felt something strike her face. She thought it was gravel, and that it had been flung from a tree overhanging the fence at the edge of the lot.

She says she looked up the tree but saw nobody. Her face began to sting. She put up her hand found that it was wet. There her hand became moist the skin also burned.

She ran to the Bradford Street Hospital and asked an ambulance driver, John Garvan, to go to the lot and see if there was any one there. He ran to the lot, but found no one. Policeman Porter of the Liberty Avenue Station was summoned. He also made a thorough search without result. An examination of Miss Meyersburg's face by her father showed, however, that she had been burned by carbolic acid. Her clothing was also spattered with it.

The police are completely mystified. Dr. Meyersburg says he does not know why any one should fling acid at his daughter. Neither he nor Miss Meyersburg can suggest a motive.

$450,000 FIRE IN UTICA.

A Dry Goods Establishment Destroyed—Clerks and Customers Escape.

UTICA, N. Y., May 10.—Utica suffered a loss of $450,000 by fire this evening. The large dry goods establishment of Robert Fraser was destroyed, as were the piano and art store of Buckingham & Moak and the millinery establishment of Simon Mansbach. John A. Roberts & Sons Company's department store sustained damage of $30,000, and Howarth & Ballard's drug store was damaged to the extent of $12,000.

The fire originated in an unknown manner amid the cotton batting stock in Mr. Fraser's store. In less than five minutes after the blaze was discovered smoke was pouring from every window, and in half an hour the fire was shooting through the roof.

There were many narrow escapes. Some of the woman clerks and customers were taken down ladders and others across roofs.

TRAIN HIT DYNAMITE; 163 REPORTED DEAD

West-Bound Express Wrecked at Harrisburg.

BODIES BLOWN INTO THE RIVER

Passenger and Freight Trains Take Fire and Are Piled in a Mass of Wreckage.

Special to The New York Times.

HARRISBURG, Penn., Thursday, May 11.—The Eastern Express of the Pennsylvania Railroad, going west, ran into an east-bound freight train at 1:10 o'clock this morning in South Harrisburg.

Two cars of the freight were loaded with dynamite and three terrific explosions followed.

Both trains were piled in a mass of wreckage, which immediately took fire, and many smaller explosions occurred.

It is estimated that 163 persons are dead and that over 100 are injured.

Definite figures cannot be obtained at this hour, as the blazing mass is unapproachable and many people are pinned in the debris.

The fire resulting from the wreck was so fierce and the explosions were so frequent that the firemen could not get near to the burning wreck.

The force of the explosion was so terrific that the passenger train was demolished.

Many of the people on the train were blown to atoms and no trace of them will ever be found.

Many of those who were not killed outright were caught in the burning debris of the wreck and their bodies were cremated.

Owing to the fierceness of the fire and the frequent explosions it was with difficulty that aid could be given to the surviving passengers.

All sorts of vehicles were pressed into service and the injured were at once carried to this city and taken to the hospitals. The disaster occurred about three miles south of here. It is said that the locomotive jumped the track and plunged into the freight cars.

The wreckage is still ablaze and unapproachable at 3:30 A. M. Many of the passengers and some members of the train crews are pinned in it, and small explosions are occurring continually.

When the first explosion occurred bodies were thrown clear out of the berths in the sleeping cars, many landing down the railroad embankment and some even being hurled into the Susquehanna River, which parallels the railroad in that locality.

All the physicians of the city procurable were summoned.

A fire alarm sounded and the firemen arrived, to find themselves practically helpless in the work of rescue.

The Harrisburg Hospital soon became overcrowded. A special train was made up and brought injured and dying to the Union Station. Many of the injured were taken to private houses.

The Harrisburg Traction Company ran out a number of cars from its South Harrisburg barns and used them to bring the injured to the hospital.

RIDGELY WARNS BANKERS.

Controller Says Guardians of Funds Must Avoid Speculation.

BOSTON, May 10.—W. B. Ridgely, Controller of the United States Currency, made a speech before the National Bank Cashiers' Association to-night, in which he talked in plain terms of the lax methods of banking which have appeared in recent years.

Mr. Ridgely declared that outside speculation was the cause of the greatest number of bank failures, and he characterized speculation as the greatest financial evil of the day. He asserted with great emphasis that no man should be allowed to hold a managerial place in a National bank who engaged in outside enterprises for profit to himself rather than the bank.

Mr. Ridgely said Directors too often shirked their duty in passing upon loans, leaving their own sworn duties to President or cashier. He laid great stress upon the necessity of Directors performing their full duty, and declared that so long as he was Controller of the Currency every Director of a National bank should bear the full weight of responsibility in the failure of any bank.

ROCKEFELLER'S FIRST AUTO.

John D., Who Was Afraid of Them, Converted by His Brother.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., May 10.—John D. Rockefeller, who always has had an aversion to automobiles and who has signs all over his estate at Pocantico Hills barring motor cars from his private drives, has decided to become an automobilist. To-day it became known that he bought recently a large covered touring car costing $5,000, which has been shipped to Pocantico Hills, where it will be ready for Mr. Rockefeller when he goes to his estate on Saturday. The machine will be driven by a French chauffeur, whom Mr. Rockefeller has just engaged.

This will be the Standard Oil man's first motor car. He has had a prejudice against risking himself in one until recently when he took several rides with his brother, William, who owns seven automobiles.

BLACK HAND THROWS BOMB.

Explosion Shatters Windows and Terrifies Little Italy.

An explosion was caused at 1:55 o'clock this morning by a bomb thrown before the building 284 East Ninety-seventh Street. In the first floor is a saloon kept by Angelo Marino, who also owns the saloon at 228 East Ninety-seventh Street. The explosion shattered all the windows in the building, broke in the front doors, and tore a large hole in the brick wall of the front.

It also ruined the building next door and broke all the windows in the house of Henry Rousseau and Guaino Dominia, across the street.

Where the bomb fell or was thrown a large hole was also torn in the sidewalk, and even a fence railing in front of the building was torn down.

Marino has been receiving "black hand" letters for several weeks past. Marino's saloon is right in the heart of Little Italy, and although the explosion was late it immediately created tremendous excitement among the tenants who hurried along the street to the spot. The police promptly sent the news of the explosion to Police Headquarters and a corps of detectives immediately began an investigation into the cause. Nobody was injured.

THREATENED THE DIANA.

Escape of Russian Cruiser Stopped When French Prepared to Sink It.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

PARIS, May 10.—I have the following information on excellent authority:

As is known, the Russian cruiser Diana arrived at Saigon from Port Arthur at the beginning of September. She was disarmed, and, having a large hole in her hull, was docked for repairs.

I hear that on the completion of the repairs the officer in charge asked permission to take a trial trip in the river in order to see whether everything was in order. The permission was granted.

The Diana steamed down toward the sea, and her attempted escape could only be prevented by a threat to fire upon her.

On the Diana's return essential parts of her machinery were removed.

Navy Official Says Victorian Made 16 Knots Without Vibration.

WASHINGTON, May 10.—Commander Canaga of the Bureau of Steam Engineering of the Navy Department, has returned here after a round trip between Halifax and Liverpool on the steamer Victorian to observe the workings of that vessel's turbine engines.

The Victorian, he reported, averaged about sixteen knots an hour across the Atlantic, running easily without any of the vibration or thumping produced by reciprocating engines.

Limoges Workmen Imprisoned Their Employer in His Factory.

LIMOGES, May 10.—The proprietor of a shoe factory who had been imprisoned in his factory here with his family, including four children, for several days by strikers was released to-day by a large force of gendarmes, who arrested a number of strikers. The family were escorted outside the town.

The strikers had placed beams across the doors and only permitted small supplies of rations to be passed into the building. They threatened to burn the factory unless their demands were granted.

Cahill says that Epping was running at a much higher rate of speed than the law allows. Erwing Untermyer went to the police station and gave $50 cash bail for Epping.

ROCKEFELLER BEARDLESS.

Those Who Say He Brought a Vandyke from Abroad Puzzled.

Special to The New York Times.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., May 10.—Mr. and Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., arrived here this afternoon. They were met at the station by John D. Rockefeller, Sr., who drove them to the Rockefeller country seat at Pocantico Hills. Those who saw young Mr. Rockefeller at the station were surprised because he was clean-shaven, reports having preceded him that he had a Vandyke beard. He was interviewed on the subject.

"Oh, that's just rumor," he said, "and anyhow it's dangerous talk."

Mrs. Rockefeller smiled broadly.

It is asserted by those who saw Mr. Rockefeller disembark from the Finland in New York Tuesday evening that he had a beard.

ROOSEVELT REBUKES LEADERS OF STRIKE

Resents Reference to Army in Chicago Petition.

REITERATES VIEWS ON RATES

Indorses Taft's Words and Talks of Canal—Off For Washington Again.

CHICAGO, May 10.—The committee appointed by the labor unions obtained an interview with President Roosevelt late this afternoon and came away with a rebuke for the way in which it referred to the United States Army in its protest and with a declaration from the President that Mayor Dunne and other authorities would be upheld in every attempt to suppress mob violence and maintain law and order.

President Roosevelt, after a busy twelve hours in the city, left at 12:10 o'clock to-night over the Pennsylvania line for Washington.

The labor unions' committee was sent to lodge a protest against the employment of the Federal troops for which, the unionists alleged, it was the plan of the employers to ask. The members of the committee were Cornelius P. Shea, President of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters; Charles Dold, President of the Chicago Federation of Labor; Joseph O'Neil, Vice President of the Chicago Federation of Labor; T. P. Quinn, a member of the Canvassers' Union, and T. Rickert, President of the Garment Workers' International Union. The committee, President Roosevelt, and Secretary Loeb were the only persons at the conference. The account of what passed was given out by Secretary Loeb:

Mr. Shea, acting as spokesman, said:

"We are here as a committee to present to you a statement of our position in this controversy between the Employers' Association and the Teamsters' Association. We have understood that they had asked your aid for bringing Federal troops to Chicago."

The President took the petition, read it, and said:

"I have read the petition, the conclusion of which is a request for a hearing before any action be taken by the President relating to the Chicago strike situation. As yet no suggestion of any kind has come to me from any source that I should take any action. Of the merits of the case I am wholly ignorant. I have no knowledge of what the situation is or of what steps should properly be taken to end it. I feel, however, that in view of one statement, or series of statements, in your letter I ought to say this:

Rebukes Attack on Army.

"I regret that you should in the letter have spoken at all of the use of the Federal army, as you have there spoken. No request has been made to me for action by the Federal Government, but at the same time, Mr. Shea, as you have in this communication brought up that matter, I want to say one thing with all the emphasis in my power. In upholding the law and order, in doing what he is able to do to suppress mob violence in any shape or way, the Mayor of Chicago, Mayor Dunne, has my hearty support. I am glad to be able to say this to you, gentlemen, before I say it to another body.

"Now, let me repeat that I know nothing of the facts of the situation. I know nothing of the right or wrong of the points at issue. What I have to say is based partly upon what I regard as the unfortunate phrasing of a letter presented to the President of the United States.

"I have not been called upon to interfere in any way, but you must not misunderstand my attitude. In every effort of Mayor Dunne to prevent violence by mobs or individuals, to see that the laws are obeyed, and that order is preserved he has the hearty support of the President of the United States, and, in my judgment, he should have that of every good citizen of the United States. Now, gentlemen, it has been a great pleasure to see you, and I am glad to have had the chance to say this to you."

Mr. Quinn, who knew the President in his youth, said:

"Mr. President, what prompted us to come to you with this statement is that for the last two or three weeks there has been a continual howl for the Federal Army. I have known you long enough to know that you would not respond to a one-sided demand—that you will not respond until you have thoroughly investigated the case."

The President replied:

No Call for Federal Action.

"Mr. Quinn, as yet the Mayor of Chicago has not made any appeal to the Governor, and therefore, of course, the Governor has made none to me; and, as yet, nothing in the situation has demanded action by me."

Mr. Shea again said:

"Let me explain that the Governor has been requested by a committee of the employers to demand Federal troops; the statement has been made in the papers. I immediately telegraphed Gov. Deneen that we would allow him to appoint a commission. Regardless of that, I want to make our position known to you in regard to mob violence. I believe that we are skilled workmen enough in our particular craft to demonstrate to our business men of Chicago that it is to their interest to employ us.

"Violence does not meet with the sympathy of our organization. I simply want to say that we want to be fair, to preserve the business interests of Chicago, realizing that the prosperity of our employers is our prosperity."

The President replied:

A Believer in Unions.

"Mr. Shea, I can only repeat what I have said. I am a believer in unions. I am an honorary member of one union. But the union must obey the law just as the corporation must obey the law; just as every man, rich or poor, must obey the law. As yet no action has been called for by me and most certainly if action is called for I shall try to do justice under the law to every man, so far as I have power. But the first essential is the preservation of law and order. The dempression of violence by mobs or individuals."

This closed the interview and the committee withdrew.

The unions' protest declared that the difficulty began as a lock-out, and "so far as there has been any striking done, it has been a strike for arbitration." Parts of the petition follow:

"Arbitration has been repeatedly spurned by the employers in the presence of Mayor Dunne of Chicago. And why spurned?

Called Army "Ready Tool."

"Because they openly boast that they can spurn it, and that the troops under your command will shoot down him who dares to openly protest against their action. They flatter themselves that the Federal army is their ready tool to act upon their suggestion—right or wrong—and they therefore refuse to have any inquiry made as to whether they are right or wrong.

"Can a few soldiers scare the men who make armies and who compose the flower of American manhood? Are we serfs that we cringe at the mention of troops? If the laboring men are wrong the decision of an arbitrator without cannon or club will command the obedience of every toiler affected. Even if we are right and the arbitrator decide against us, still we will bow to that decision.

"Every laboring man knows these facts. What will be the results upon the citizenship of this country if, when American citizens ask for court procedure and order they are met by the bullet and the jail? Is it not time to inquire as to the facts in the case? We submit that labor is an essential of National life. And the sympathy and co-operation of the laborers in their life work is as essential as is the sympathy and co-operation of citizenship. Unionism can no more be destroyed in industrial life than can patriotism in political life."

Treasury Department's Caution.

The Treasury Department in Washington to-day received a telegram from the Woolmerger Company of Milwaukee, which has the contract for furniture for the Federal offices in Chicago, asking that military wagons be sent to deliver furniture to the Government Building in Chicago. Assistant Secretary Taylor replied that if the company would notify the Teamsters' Union in Chicago that it was about to deliver Government goods he did not expect there would be any trouble.

At the luncheon given by the Merchants' Club this afternoon Mayor Dunne told the President that the most alarming stage of the strike had passed and that the police had control of the situation.

George S. Pierce, a striking teamster, was killed to-night by George T. Waldorn, a Deputy Sheriff guarding a Wells-Fargo express wagon.

Striker Shot by Deputy.

Waldorn formerly was a member of the Teamsters' Union, and Pierce taunted him with his change in employment. Waldorn drew a revolver and fired one shot, the bullet striking Pierce just above the heart. Waldorn was arrested.

Notwithstanding the tacit agreement that there was to be no violence while President Roosevelt was in the city, there were numerous outbreaks, one taking place in Michigan Avenue a short time after the President had passed the spot. One negro was shot in the leg and two cut about the face and hands.

In a riot this afternoon on Twenty-second Place, Edward Wright, a strike sympathizer, was shot in the groin by a non-union teamster, who was driving a United States Express Company wagon. The crowd rushed toward the express wagon, but the police guards repelled the attack.

The employers sent out more wagons to-day with fewer guards than at any previous time. To-night it was said that fully 2,000 men were ready to take charge of wagons.

800 PUPILS JOIN STRIKE.

Walk Out of School When Non-Union Teamster Brings Coal.

CHICAGO, May 10.—Eight hundred pupils of the Hendricks Public School, at Forty-third Street and Princeton Avenue, went on strike to-day because a negro teamster for the Peabody Coal Company delivered a load of coal at the building.

Many teamsters stopped near the school and prompted the pupils in their strike. Police sent to the school, it is said, used clubs on more than one pupil. The crowd quickly scattered.

URGES NAVY FOR PEACE.

Courteous Diplomacy and Preparedness President's Policy.

CHICAGO, May 10.—"No business community can succeed unless it be based on high ideals. Permanent success comes only when the average man may be trusted in dealing with his fellow-men. So it is in fact with the success of the Nation," President Roosevelt said to the Merchants' Club at the luncheon at the Auditorium this afternoon. With these words he led to the theme of upbuilding a great navy for the sake of the Nation's commerce and honor. He said in part:

"I need not say to those of you who know anything of me at all that I believe in a big navy, and I hope I need not say that I believe it is not as a provocative to war, but as a guarantee of peace. And I want to say every section of this country realizes that the navy stands for the whole country, and that the people of the seacoasts are not a particle more interested in it than the people of the Mississippi Valley. There were two sides to the establishment of that naval station here where it was established.

"In the first place, we get, as perhaps some of you know, a peculiarly valuable class of recruits for the navy from the Mississippi Valley and the regions adjoining the great lakes.

"In the next place, I wanted to see part of the establishment of the navy have its local habitation or name here in the great West. And so I feel that this organization conferred a favor not only upon the City of Chicago, but an advantage to the whole country in what it did toward securing the establishment of that station here where it has been established. I do not think that is now very necessary to make an argument for an efficient navy.

"We are so fortunate that in this country we can get along with a very small army; an army, which, relative to the population of the country, is smaller than the police force of any one of our great cities. With the navy the case is different. We have not the choice, gentlemen, as to whether this country will play a great part in the world; we cannot help playing a great part. All we can decide is whether we will play it well or ill; we have that to decide. We can consider whether we will do badly or well, but we cannot decide whether the parts are to be played; we have got to play them.

"We cannot abandon our position on the Monroe Doctrine; we cannot abandon the Panama Canal; we cannot abandon the duties that have come to us from the mere fact of our growth as a Nation, from the growth of our commercial interests in the East, and in the West, on the Atlantic, and on the Pacific. Now I earnestly hope that with the added responsibility will come not merely a growth in power to meet that responsibility, but a growth in sobriety of mental attitude on our part toward these new duties.

"In private life there is no one to whom we rightly object more than the man who is continually offending and insulting his neighbors, except to the man who, in addition to that, then fails to make good. Now, I hope to see our foreign policy conducted always in a spirit not merely of scrupulous regard for the rights of others, but of scrupulous courtesy toward others, and at the same time to see us keep prepared so that there is no position that we take in either hemisphere that once taken we cannot abandon. In that attitude, not only is it important that the Government officials should behave themselves, but it is important that private citizens should.

"The outsiders cannot hurt us by being insolent as long as we behave ourselves, and what they say is of no consequence to us compared to what we say of them. Hard words wont hurt us if we disregard them. Let them say anything and go on and build up the navy."

After the Merchants' Club luncheon President Roosevelt greeted and shook by the hand 8,010 Chicagoans at the Hamilton Club rooms. Then he said in part:

"It was before the Hamilton Club that I made a speech with a title which I did no[t] [illegible] attract any attention, but when I [illegible] 'The Strenuous Life.' [Laughter.] I mention it now because from that day to this I have never dared to use the phrase 'the strenuous life' at all.

"You, by your name, commemorate a great statesman—Hamilton—one of the most brilliant and one of the greatest constructive statesmen of the era of constructive statesmanship; a man to whom this republic owes a well-nigh incalculable debt.

"Hamilton lacked but one great quality; it was the quality which his great adversary, Jefferson, possessed in so peculiar a degree—trust and belief in the people. In our second great crisis of the Republic's life we developed a son of Illinois, a man born in Kentucky, but by adoption and long life a citizen of Illinois—a man who combined the strength, the efficiency, the far-sightedness of Hamilton, with Jefferson's intense belief in the people, a man greater than either—Abraham Lincoln."

The parlors were turned over then to the Harvard Club. The club's President, Kellogg Fairbanks, stood at the President's left and introduced more than 300 graduates. President Roosevelt spoke of the need of Harvard for "Western blood."

The reception committee of the Iroquois Club next took the President in hand. The whole party hurried to the waiting carriages and was rushed to the Auditorium Annex, where the President received the labor unions' delegation.

RENEWS DEMAND FOR RATE LAW

President Declares "We Will Dig That Canal"—Speech at Iroquois Dinner.

CHICAGO, May 10.—President Roosevelt to-night was the chief guest at a banquet tendered to him by the Iroquois Club, the leading Democratic organization of Illinois. He was cheered to the echo as he entered and left the banquet hall, and was applauded with enthusiasm throughout his address.

At the President's table were Mayor Edward F. Dunne, Charles F. Gunther, President of the Iroquois Club; James Hamilton Lewis, toastmaster; Samuel Alschuler, Judge Murray F. Tuley, Sheriff Thomas E. Barrett, and other Democrats. Of the Republicans there were at the same table Gov. Charles S. Deneen, Senator A. J. Hopkins, Judge C. C. Kohlsaat, Judge K. W. Landis, and a dozen more.

Mayor Dunne's welcome was conveyed in the following words:

"This city greets Theodore Roosevelt because he is the chosen chief of eighty millions of free people; because by his sterling manhood, patriotism, and energy he has fairly and honestly won the proud position he now occupies—the proudest on earth—and because in his character he typifies that which the citizens of this city honor above all else—honesty of purpose and intensity of effort.

"Most of us here to-night differ with him in many of his policies and political convictions, and have often declared that he has been in political error, but none of us ever has doubted the honesty of his convictions or the patriotism of his character.

"In common with our fellow-citizens of other political faiths we heartily welcome him within the walls of our city and the doors of our club, and express the sincere hope that his days may be long, his joys many, and his sorrows few."

James Hamilton Lewis, toastmaster, in introducing President Roosevelt, referred to him as "a man whose impartial Americanism is as broad as the limits of the Union which it blesses, the purity of whose intentions is as that of the Crusaders in the quest of the cross, whose valor as a soldier, whose justice as a ruler has inspired affection in the hearts of the humblest, while it has commanded the salute of respect from the powerful of earth."

Favors Opposition Parties.

President Roosevelt said:

"Mr. President, Mr. Toastmaster, and you, my hosts: I very deeply appreciate the honor of being your guest and guest of the City of Chicago this evening, and in looking at the possibilities of the future let me add that I have not the least anticipation of Chicago's ever reversing that most complimentary vote which I so deeply appreciated last year, because it will never have the chance. [Laughter and applause.]

"Our country is governed and under existing circumstances can only be governed under the party system, and that should mean and will mean that there will be a frank and manly opposition of party to party; of party man to party man; combined with an equally frank refusal to conduct a party contest in any such way as to give good Americans cause for regret because of what is said before election when compared with what is said after election. [Applause.]

"The frankest opposition to a given man or a given party on questions of public policy not only can be but almost always should be combined with the frankest recognition of the infinitely greater number of points of agreement than of the points of difference. And I have accepted your kind and generous invitation to come before you this evening, because the longer I am in political life the more firmly I am convinced that the great bulk of the questions of most importance before us as a people are questions which we can best decide not from the standpoint of Republicanism or Democracy, but from the standpoint of the interests of the average American citizen, whether Republican or Democrat.

"There are foreign questions and there are domestic questions. Our politics should and in the great majority do disappear at the water's edge. Most questions that come up in Washington are questions that go much deeper than party; are questions that affect the whole country, and the man would indeed be unfit for the position of President who did not feel that when he held that office he held it in the most emphatic sense as the representative of all the people.

We'll Dig That Canal.

"One of the works Uncle Sam has on hand just at present is digging the Panama Canal, and it is going to be dug. It is going to be dug honestly and as cheaply as is compatible with efficiency, but with efficiency first. I wanted Congress to give me power to remodel the commission. It did not do it.

"I remodeled it, anyhow, purely in the exercise of my executive functions. And I made up my mind this time that I was not going to make the slightest effort to represent different sections of the country on that canal; I was going to try to have the whole country represented and put the best man I could get in any given position, without the slightest regard to where he came from.

"I believe that sooner or later it will be found that the great bulk of our people agree with what I am about to say.

"Among the most vital questions that have come up for solution because of the extraordinary industrial development of this country, as of all the modern world, are the questions of capital and labor, and the questions resulting from the effect upon the public of the organization into great masses of both capital and labor. I believe thoroughly in each kind of organization, but I recognize that if either kind of organization does what is wrong the increase in its power for efficiency that has resulted from the combination means the increase in its power to do harm; and that, therefore, corporation, that is, organized capital, and union, that is, organized labor, must alike be held to a peculiar responsibility to the public at large, and that from each alike we have the right to demand not only obedience to the law but service to the public.

Two Sides to Control.

"Now observe, there are two sides to what I have said, and we are very apt to hear only insistence upon one side—sometimes the insistence upon this side, sometimes the insistence upon that, but not as often as we should insistence upon both sides of the question.

"I will take up first the question of organized capital. When this Nation was created such a thing as a modern corporation not only did not exist, but could not be imagined. That is especially true of the great modern corporations engaged in inter-State commerce. A century ago the highways of commerce were exactly such as they had been from the days of the dawn of civilization on the banks of the Nile and in Mesopotamia. We now have the great highways of commerce of an entirely different kind.

"For the first time in history we have a highway for the commerce of all the people under the control of a private individual or a private corporation. Now, [illegible] the first place insist upon this fact, that the men who have built up the great railway systems of this country, like the other men who have built up the great industries of this country, have, as a rule, made their fortunes as incidents to benefiting and not to harming the country. We have all benefited by the talents of the great captains of industry.

"All of this that I have said I wish kept in mind steadily in appreciating what I am going to say, for, while acknowledging in the frankest manner the benefits that have come from the development of these great industrial enterprises, I also feel that we must recognize that the time has now come when it is essential, in the interests of the public, that there should be exercised a power of supervision and regulation over them.

To Regulate All Corporations.

"Personally I believe that the Federal Government must take an increasing control over corporations. I trust there will be no halt in the steady process of assuming such national control, and the first step toward it should be the adoption of a law conferring upon some executive body the power of increased supervision and regulation of the great corporations engaged primarily in Inter-State Commerce of the railroads.

"And my views on that subject could not have been better expressed than they were expressed yesterday, I think, by Secretary Taft in Washington, as they were expressed by the Attorney General in his communication to the Senate committee a couple of weeks ago.

"I believe that the representatives of the Nation should lodge in some executive body the power to establish a maximum rate, the power to have that rate go into effect practically immediately, and the power to see that the provisions of the law apply in full to the companies owning private cars just as much as to the railroads themselves.

"The courts would retain, no matter what the Legislature did, the power to interfere and upset any action that was confiscatory in its nature.

"I am well aware that the action of such a body as I have spoken of may stop far short of confiscation and yet do great damage. In other words, I am well aware that to give this power means the possibility that the power may be abused. That possibility we must face.

Possibility of Abuse.

"Any power which could be granted sufficiently great to be efficient would be sufficiently great to be harmful if abused. That is true of the power of taxation. Nevertheless, the power of taxation must exist, and so with the power of which I speak. It must exist; it must be lodged in some body which is to give expression to the needs of the people as a whole, and the fact that it is possible that the power may be abused is not and cannot be an argument against placing it where we shall have a right to expect that it will be used fairly toward all.

"One thing I wish definitely understood: If the power is granted to me to create such a board, such a commission, or to continue in power, if I so desire, a commission or board, with increased powers, I shall strive to appoint and retain men who will do exactly the same justice to the railroads as they will exact from the railroads.

"Now for the other side of the question. There have been a great many republics before our time, and again and again those republics have split upon the rock of disaster—the greatest and most dangerous rock in the course of any republic, the rock of class hatred. Sometimes the republic became a republic in which one class grew to dominate over another class, and for loyalty to the republic was substituted loyalty to a class. The result was in every case the same.

Class Spirit Means Ruin.

"It meant disaster and, ultimately, the downfall of the Republic. It mattered not one whit which class it was that became dominant; it mattered not one whit whether the poor plundered the rich or the rich exploited the poor. In either case, just as soon as the Republic became one in which one class sought to benefit itself by injuring another class, in which one class substituted loyalty to that class for loyalty to the Republic, the end of the Republic was at hand.

"No true patriot will fail to do everything in his power to prevent the growth of any such spirit in this country.

"This Government is not and never shall be the Government of a plutocracy. This Government is not and never shall be the Government of a mob. I believe in corporations. They are indispensable instruments in our modern industrialism, but I believe that they should be so supervised and regulated that they should act for the interests of the community as a whole. So I believe in unions. I am proud of the fact that I am an honorary member of one union, but I believe that the union, like the individual, must be kept to a strict accountability to the power of the law.

Put Down the Mob, He Says.

"Mayor Dunne, as President of the United States, and therefore as the representative of the people of this country, I give you as a matter of course my hearty support in upholding the law, in keeping order, in putting down violence, whether by a mob or by an individual. [Cheers, with many standing waving handkerchiefs and napkins.]

"And there need not fie the slightest apprehension in the hearts of the most timid that ever the mob spirit will triumph in this country. Those responsible for dealing with the trouble must exhaust every effort in so dealing with it before call is made upon any outside body. But if ever the need arises, back of the city stands the State, and back of the State stands the Nation. [Cheers.]

"And there, gentlemen, is a point upon which all good Americans are one. They are all one in the conviction in the firm determination that this country shall remain in the future as it has been in the past, a country of liberty and justice under the forms of law.

"A country in which the rule of the people is supreme, but in which that will finds its expression through the forces of law and order—through the forms of law expressed as provided for in the Constitution of the United States and of the several States that go to make up our Nation."

MR. REID TO CLOSE HIS FARM.

Ambassador Selling His Fine Horses and Cattle.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., May 10.—On account of his appointment to be American Ambassador at London, Whitelaw Reid is selling all the horses and cattle at Ophir Farm, his country place, near White Plains. As Mr. Reid will be in England four years his large estate will be kept closed, and he will keep but half a dozen men to look after the place.

One of the largest sales of the Reid stock was made to Louis A. Ripley of Litchfield, Conn., who purchased the Reid herd of Kerry cattle, the best herd of the breed in this country. The cows were imported from Ireland, and they were special favorites of Mr. and Mrs. Reid. Imported Jerseys cows went to H. C. Fleitman of Atlantic Highlands, N. J.

Sheep that were imported from England were sold to Melvin E. Rice of Atlantic Highlands. W. Cogswell Rogers of Berkshire County, Mass., bought ninety-two angora goats and kids. All Mr. Reid's fine coach horses are being sold.

VICTIMS AT ZHITOMIR NUMBER MORE THAN 100

Renewal of the Anti-Jewish Rioting Is Feared.

PITCHED BATTLE IN SQUARE

Military Intervened After Much Blood Had Been Shed—An Anti-Semitic Outbreak in Poland.

ST. PETERSBURG, Thursday, May 11.—According to private advices from Zhitomir, the anti-Jewish riots here resulted in 16 persons being killed and over 100 wounded, mostly Jews.

Reports were current here yesterday that the number of killed or wounded at Zhitomir was 200. Press dispatches are being held up. Telegrams sent by The Associated Press to Zhitomir remain unanswered.

Martial law, according to private dispatches, was proclaimed at Zhitomir today. The city is filled with troops and order generally is restored, though individual cases of violence are still occurring, and a renewal of rioting on Saturday evening and Sunday is feared. The stores, which have been barricaded, are gradually reopening, and the ordinary life of the city is being resumed.

The same private advices bring news of a further anti-Semitic outbreak in Gostynin, in the Province of Warsaw, in which many Jews were injured and many houses were pillaged. No fatalities, however, are reported, but Jewish circles here fear further developments, not only in Zhitomir and Gostynin, but also in other localities along the Polish frontier, where the Jewish element is numerous and the anti-Semitic sentiment is strong.

The official account of the Zhitomir tumult assigns the origin of the rioting to an encounter between a party of Jews in a boat and some roughs on the bank of the river. The latter stoned the Jews, who defended themselves with revolvers, wounding several of the attacking party, but not seriously.

KIEFF, May 10.—Reports of the anti-Jewish disorders at Zhitomir, which were chiefly confined to May 7, though beginning the preceding day and continuing in minor form through May 9, indicate that they were participated in chiefly by roughs.

The Associated Press is informed that the number of dead is eighteen, of whom fifteen were Jews and three were students.

FRENCH RULES NOW RIGOROUS.

Governor of Indo-China Tells Two Russian Cruisers to Sail Away.

SAIGON, May 10.—The Russian cruiser Jemtchug and the Russian auxiliary cruiser Rion, belonging to Admiral Rojestvensky's squadron, arrived off Cape St. James, near here, on the night of May 8, and left yesterday morning on the invitation of the Governor of French Indo-China.

The two cruisers, which brought instructions for Admiral Nebogatoff, anchored three or four miles off shore. A heavy sea was running, exposing a good deal of the warships' hulls, which were quite free from barnacles or seaweed. The ships appeared to have unusually large crews, and it seemed that the men were all in good health.

It is considered likely that Nebogatoff's division has already passed Cape St. James.

PARIS, May 10.—Admiral de Jonquières (the French naval commander at Saigon) confirms the anouncement of the departure of the Russian squadron from off Van-Fong Bay. He says he saw the Russians well off the coast under full steam.

The officials here say the French Admiral's report relieves the seriousness of the issue with Japan, as the departure of the squadron was what Japan asked for.

The report of the junction of Admiral Nebogatoff's division with the main Russian squadron under Admiral Rojestvensky outside of French waters is also considered to be official. This averts serious apprehension that their junction near Saigon would conspicuously show two Russian naval forces inside French waters.

In the course of an apparently authoritative statement published here to-day of Japan's case against France a summary is given of various acts of assistance rendered to the vessels of the Russian Second Pacific Squadron at Cherbourg, Dakar, Algiers, Jibuti, Magunga, Nossi Bé, Kamranh Bay, Port Dayot, and Hon-Kohe Bay. The conclusions of the Japanese Government are stated to be as follows:

"First—Without questioning the good faith of France, Japan holds that th French orders to observe neutrality have not been sufficiently executed.

"Second—France should have taken sufficient measures beforehand to prevent violations of neutrality instead of securing the observance of neutrality after Japan's remonstrances.

"Third—In default of sufficient surveillance Admiral Rojestvensky has been greatly facilitated in the accomplishment of his mission and in gaining access to Chinese waters. Consequently it was for the ends of warfare that Admiral Rojestvensky utilized on successive occasions French waters for anchoring, revictualing, and awaiting the arrival of reinforcements."

NEUTRALITY BREACH PROVED?

Japanese Navy Department Said to Have Definite Information.

TOKIO, May 10.—The Government maintains reserve, but the Indo-Chinese situation seems to be rapidly approaching a crisis.

Following the repeated assurances of the French Foreign Minister, M. Delcassé, to Dr. Motono, the Japanese Minister at Paris, that the vessels of the Russian Second Pacific Squadron were outside territorial waters, the Navy Department here has received reliable information that a portion of the squadron was inside of Hon-Kohe Bay the morning of May 6.

It is generally believed that the Fourth Division (Nebogatoff's) of the Russian squadron will use French water to coal, take on board other supplies, and clean their hulls.

KUROPATKIN BLAMES TROOPS.

Says His Orders During Battle of Mukden Were Not Executed.

GUNSHU PASS, May 10.—Gen. Kuropatkin was interviewed to-day, but said nothing about the reports that he is about to return to Russia.

The ex-Commander in Chief said he believed the Japanese were again ready to assume the offensive. He declared that his orders to remove the transport from Mukden were not executed promptly, and when the final order was given to retreat the roads assigned to the various divisions were not taken, which caused much confusion.

The General added that the Japanese [illegible] across a bridge across [illegible] at the [illegible] allotted to guard that portion of the line not taken up the wrong position.

EVERY PIANOLA PIANO

Has the Metrostyle

"THE first complete piano" would be a misnomer were not the owner able at will to command authoritative guidance in interpreting unfamiliar music for the first time. Few persons read well from a poem or play with the periods, dramatic climaxes and literary style of which they are unfamiliar.

Fewer still can render well an unfamiliar musical composition. The thin red Metrostyle line upon a music roll, clearly recording the tempo of the composer or an authoritative interpreter, gives the most difficult music interest from the outset, enabling the player to render any composition with emphasis and character.

It constantly invites the music lover into broader fields of pleasure and study. Yet when this purpose has been fulfilled, the Metrostyle line may be abandoned if desired and one's own interpretation substituted. It is as helpful as the footnotes in a book, yet may be disregarded as easily.

The Pianola Piano, playable either with the fingers or by means of the Pianola contained within the case.

The Metrostyle is so inseparable an aid to the full enjoyment of the Pianola Piano that it has been included in every instrument just as it is also embodied in all Pianolas. Found only in these instruments, it puts at the disposal of the player a great library of Metrostyled music, many of the rolls in which have been interpreted by living composers themselves. In this library are signed authorized interpretations by Paderewski, Richard Strauss, Edvard Grieg, Cecile Chaminade, Teresa Carreno, Harold Bauer, Gabriel Faure, Gabrilowitsch, Magdeleine Godard, Moszkowski, Alfred Hertz, Emil Paur, Raoul Pugno, Sousa, and others, and it also includes scholarly interpretations of hundreds of the greatest classics.

Purchasable on moderate monthly payments.

The Pianola Piano does not differ from the ordinary upright piano in any outward aspect. Both Piano and Pianola are fully as effective as the separate instruments, while being more convenient and economical of space. Prices of the Pianola Piano $500 to $1,000. Descriptive literature and music catalogues, showing repertory, sent to any address on request.

HENDRICKS EXAMINES VICE PRESIDENT HYDE

State Official Asks About Syndicate Transactions.

DIRECTORS PRESS INQUIRY

Write to Frick Committee and Mr. Hendricks—Tull Suit to Restrain Superintendent Dismissed.

Vice President James H. Hyde of the Equitable Assurance Society spent most of the day yesterday under examination by Superintendent Hendricks of the State Insurance Department, and Mr. Hendricks's counsel, Congressman Michael E. Driscoll of Syracuse. Mr. Hyde, accompanied by Samuel Untermyer, his counsel, met Mr. Hendricks in the board room of the society in the morning. Mr. Untermyer, however, stayed but a half hour, and the examination of Mr. Hyde, while under oath, as in the case of all of the officials of the Equitable who will be called, was of a personal nature.

After the day's sessions were over, Superintendent Hendricks and Mr. Driscoll refused to discuss the matter, and Mr. Hyde also declined to make any statement. It was learned, however, that the documents taken to the board room, and upon which the examination was based, had to do with the syndicate operations of James H. Hyde and Associates, the terms of leases of space in the Equitable Building to corporations in which Mr. Hyde is interested as a shareholder or Director, and the relations, if any, that may have existed between Mr. Hyde and Kuhn, Loeb & Co. and Mr. Hyde and E. H. Harriman with respect to underwritings and other transactions of a similar nature.

Late on Tuesday President Alexander of the society was before the State Superintendent and was questioned, it is learned, on his participations in syndicate transactions of James H. Hyde and Associates. His explanation, according to some of his friends yesterday, was that he knew nothing about the details of the transactions until the receipt of the two checks, which he turned over to the cashier of the society, about the time that the controversy about mutualization became public. During the greater part of his examination Mr. Alexander was not accompanied by counsel.

A number of topics involving charges that have been made by the Alexander faction against Mr. Hyde have been presented to Mr. Hendricks to be used as a basis for his examination of the Equitable's Vice President.

As given out by friends of Mr. Alexander, they include requests for explanation of the circumstances by which Mr. Hyde, on May 10, 1899, shortly after the death of his father, was elected Vice President of the society, by which a salary of $25,000 a year was voted to him the following July, one of $75,000 in 1899, and one of $100,000 in 1902, and for information of the duties which Mr. Hyde performs in consideration of these salaries.

Similarly information is asked about a salary of $12,500 as Vice President of the Mercantile Trust Company and one of $10,000 from the Equitable Trust Company, and salaries alleged to have been received from the Commercial Trust of Philadelphia, in which Mr. Hyde is a Director; the Mercantile Safe Deposit Company here, of which he is Vice President and a Director; the Security Safe Deposit Company of Boston, of which he is Vice President and a Director, and the Coney Island and Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, of which Mr. Hyde is Second Vice President and a Director. It is declared that besides the interest of the Equitable Life in the trust companies above mentioned, Mr. Hyde himself has large personal holdings.

In addition Mr. Hendricks has been asked to find out, it is said, whether it is true that underwriting syndicates in which Mr. Hyde has participated have been instrumental in selling to the society securities amounting to over $100,000,000 in the last three years, and whether $22,000,000 of such securities have been sold through the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

Several of the Equitable directors not directly affiliated with either faction within the society's management, and who have been incensed at the reflections upon the members of the board incident to the disclosures of the past three months, have sent to the Frick committee of investigators and also to Superintendent Hendricks letters requesting that both investigations shall be thorough and conducted with a single aim to find out the truth. Some of these letters have been sent since the service at Monday's meeting of the summons in the Mary S. Young suit, which seeks to hold the Directors individually and as Directors responsible for whatever irregularities may exist in the management.

In the Supreme Court here yesterday Justice MacLean denied the application of counsel for Herbert G. Tull of Philadelphia for an injunction restraining the State Superintendent of Insurance from giving his approval to the proposed amended charter embodying the mutualization plan. Justice MacLean in his decision recites Section 605 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which prohibits the granting of an injunction restraining a State officer from performing one of the duties of his office except at a term of the Supreme Court sitting in the department in which the office of the official is located. A. Edward Woodruff, counsel for Mr. Tull, was assessed $10 costs.

In connection with the presence of Postmaster General Cortelyou here for the meeting of the McKinley Memorial Trustees, it was declared last night that there was no truth in any statement that the Presidency of the Equitable had been tendered to him, the fact being that he had been approached by an individual outside of the society to see whether he would take it in the event that Mr. Alexander should resign. It was with such a mission that William Nelson Cromwell was reported to have gone to Washington recently. The talk of Mr. Cortelyou for the Presidency of the Equitable began at that time.

SAYS VAULTS ARE SAFE.

No Further Loss Through Stolen Policies, Adds Alexander.

It is not unlikely that the employe of the Equitable Life Assurance Society who is believed to be implicated in the $27,000 policy loan swindle managed by Sam Lobley, or William Dailey, who was taken into custody at Sprague ville, Penn., on Monday, will be arrested to-day, and possibly also a third party whom the Equitable officials believe to be connected with the affair. The representatives of the society declined yesterday to say whether the third party was in the society's employ or not. When his attention was called yesterday to rumors that a larger robbery had been committed by the same methods, or through the abstraction of other securities than the pledged policies on which loans have been made, President James W. Alexander said:

"I fully realize that the arrest of an outsider for having obtained a fraudulent loan of $27,000 on a policy stolen, as we fear, by one of our trusted employes, could give rise to conjectures about the safety of other collateral held by the society. But the truth is that the set of men who could possibly have stolen the policy on which the Lobley loan was made was not the same set of men who had access to the vaults in which are kept our stocks and bonds.

"The investigation that has been going on ever since last February into the Lobley transaction, at night and on days when the clerks have not been working, shows that there is not the possibility of further loss through stolen policies."

Lobley was held at Stroudsburg, Penn., yesterday for requisition papers.

INSURANCE CONCERNS HIT HARD BY AUSTRIA

Diplomatic Support for New York Company's Protest.

RETROACTIVE TAX DEMANDED

High Court Rules That Stamp Duty for Nine Years Must Be Paid by Foreign Companies.

VIENNA, May 10.—The Government is taking action against foreign life insurance companies, with the exception of German concerns doing business in this country. Business is rendered almost impossible, and the matter has resulted in action by the representatives here of the United States, Great Britain, Belgium, and Holland.

The laws under which foreign life insurance companies may do business in Austria provide that they must invest and keep invested in Austrian Government securities a sum equal to their total liabilities. Deeds showing such investments must be filed with the authorities.

Before filing these deeds the companies wrote to the Tax Assessment Office and learned from it that the deeds could be filed without payment of stamp duties thereon. This has been done for the past nine years.

The Administrative High Court has now overruled this order of things and has informed a life insurance company of New York that it must not only pay the stamp duty on the deeds, amounting to $683 on each $200,000 investment recorded in the future, but that this duty is retroactive and will be collected for the past nine years.

The English, Dutch, and Belgian companies have made common cause with the New York concern and have taken the matter up with the diplomatic representatives of their respective countries. As a result Bellamy Storer, the American Ambassador, and the British Chargé d'Affaires called at the Foreign Office this afternoon and used their good offices in presenting a memorial containing the facts of the case. They requested that before final decision is rendered on the question full consideration be given to it by the Finance Ministry. This request was granted.

It was stated that the American Government regarded the matter as grave, especially as regards the retroactive effect of the court's decision. It is well known that Ambassador Storer is acting under instructions from the State Department to exert his best offices.

NO ATLANTIC RATE WAR YET.

But Lines Withdraw from Agreement So as to be Able to Fight.

LONDON, May 10.—The withdrawal of the Cunard Line from the tentative passenger-rate agreement was followed today by an official announcement from the White Star, Dominion, and American Lines that they had given notice of their withdrawal from the North Atlantic Passenger Conference first and second class rate agreements and third-class British, Scandinavian, and Continental agreements.

It is explained that this action was taken in view of the withdrawal of the Cunard Line from all passenger-rate agreements. It was felt necessary that the other lines should be equally free from all agreements, so as to be enabled to protect themselves against any action inimical to their interests taken by the Cunard Line.

The Allan, Anchor, and Cunard Lines have been notified of the combine's withdrawal.

LIVERPOOL, May 10.—An official of the White Star Line this evening officially confirmed the announcement of the withdrawal of the White Star, Dominion, and American Lines from certain agreements of the North Atlantic Passenger Conference.

It is stated that there is no likelihood of a rate war while the passenger business is brisk at full rates. The action taken is rather a precautionary measure against any possible action on the part of the Cunard Company.

Vernon H. Brown, New York agent of the Cunard Line, said yesterday:

"I can see no reason to look for any rate war just now. It is the busy season, all lines are getting their fair proportion of business, and as a rule ships are going quite full. As long as there is business enough to go around there would seem to be no inducement to cut rates. It may be stated, however, that while the Cunard Company is not disposed to create any demoralization in rates, its future policy will of course be influenced by the attitude of its competitors."

IN HONOR OF JAMES STOKES.

Prominent Americans and Englishmen at Y. M. C. A. Meeting in Rome.

ROME, May 10.—A largely attended meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association was held here to-day in honor of James Stokes of New York, who donated the funds for the erection of the association's building in Rome. Nearly all the prominent members of the American and British colonies were present. Ambassador White sent a letter of regret, saying he was prevented by a previous engagement from attending the gathering.

Mr. Stokes delivered an address in which he described the inauguration of the building in New York for the Latin branch of the Young Men's Christian Association.

GIFTS TO GEN. PORTER.

Americans in Paris Show Their Regard for the ex-Ambassador.

PARIS, May 10.—A delegation from the American Art Association called on Gen. Porter (the ex-American Ambassador) today and presented to him a gold medal and a set of resolutions adopted by the association complimenting him on his achievements as Ambassador and expressing regret at his departure.

Edward Tuck, a prominent American resident of Paris, to-day formally presented to Gen. Porter a gold medal, executed at the French Mint, commemorative of his services in recovering the body of Paul Jones.

The American Chamber of Commerce this afternoon presented to Gen. Porter a set of resolutions reciting his achievements while Ambassador in aid of the commerce and trade of the two countries.

The Russian Ambassador, M. Nelidoff, gave a dinner to Gen. Porter to-night. Foreign Minister Delcassé will give a breakfast to Gen. Porter at the Foreign Office on Friday.

Six Hundred Fine Walking Skirts, at $6 Each
A Season's Clean-up
Of the Largest Concern in the Business

This is one of the finest offerings of Women's Separate Skirts made this year. The Skirts come from a manufacturer who makes nothing else, and he is the largest manufacturer of Women's Skirts in the business. The present collection is composed of the aristocracy of his stock.

The materials are the most stylish, and the most seasonable for Summer wear—voiles, plain and fancy mohair, light-weight prunella cloth and water-proof worsteds. The colorings include blue, green, brown, various mixtures and black. The Skirts are made over the very handsomest models shown this season. All are in Summer weights, and are finished with hand-made hems at the bottom, which will allow of letting down if it is desired to lengthen the Skirt. Every Skirt is fresh and perfect.

The most conservative valuation would give a price-range of $8 to $15 as the values; today all are marked at $6 each.

There has been no hadsomer stock shown this year at regular prices, and no more desirable Skirts for Summer wear are to be found anywhere at any price than will be found in this collection today. It is a piece of remarkably good news. Second floor, Broadway.

The New Bathing Suits Are Ready

The styles for women this year are even more dressy than last season; the shape of the waist, the fine plaiting and even the trimming make them look much like pretty shirt-waist suits; the chief difference being that the necks are lower, finished in round and square styles, though some have sailor collars.

The materials are brilliant mohairs, surf cloths, taffeta silks, and shepherd's check fabrics. The skirts are in pretty gored and plaited styles; the waists are in full blouse effect. Some of the suits are finished with simple tailor-stitching, others are elaborately trimmed with braid.

Surf cloth Suits in blue and black, $3, $4 and $5.

Brilliantine Suits, $3.50, $4, $4.50, $5, $7.50 and $8.

Taffeta silk Suits in blue and black, at $16.50, $22.50 and $27.50.

RACE TO SEIZE ASSETS OF HAIGHT & FREESE CO.

Bankruptcy Suit Said to be Part of Managers' Plan.

CERTIFIED CHECK STOPPED

Judge Lacombe Refuses to Discharge Receiver or to Vacate Injunction Forbidding Any Payments.

The men who are chiefly interested in the Haight & Freese Company, the stock brokerage concern, of 53 Broadway and 215 West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, which was thrown into the hands of receivers on Tuesday, on allegations of insolvency and fraud brought by several creditors, yesterday made great efforts to have the receivership vacated and to secure their position in other ways. Vigilance of attorneys for the complaining customers defeated them. W. H. Lillis, Vice President and manager of the Boston office of the company, arrived in this city early in the morning and went into secret conference with George G. Turner, who had come on from Philadelphia, and Harvey Watson, manager of the New York office.

W. P. Maloney, attorney for Ridgway Bowker, the complaining creditor, expressed the suspicion yesterday that this conference had resulted in the bringing of another suit, ostensibly by a creditor, but really in the interest of the concern, to have the company thrown into bankruptcy, and then to have receivers appointed who would be in sympathy with the managers of the corporation.

The action to have the company thrown into bankruptcy was begun in the United States District Court, where C. H. A. Dougherty, a broker, filed, through his attorney, James C. Lenney, a petition in involuntary bankruptcy against the firm. To-day Mr. Lenney will ask for the appointment of receivers in bankruptcy in the District Court. The appointment of these receivers would probably raise a question of jurisdiction between the United States District and the United States Circuit Courts, which would complicate matters. Lawyers for other complaining creditors fear that these complications might result to the advantage of the corporation and its backers. In Dougherty's petition appears the assertion that the firm had only twelve creditors.

The backers of the company made strong efforts yesterday to gain possession of some of the cash which was deposited in various banks, either in the name of the company or in their own individual names. They succeeded in having a check certified at the Colonial Bank, where the company had an account. It is understood that the check was for $3,000. Roger Foster, attorney for the receiver, heard of the certification while he was telephoning to the various banks and trust companies to warn them against paying out any moneys belonging to the company. The Colonial Bank at once had the check stopped, but enough time had elapsed to have enabled the backers of the company to get the check cashed at some other institution, though no record of such a transaction could be found yesterday.

The attorney for the receivers at once had a copy of the injunction against the paying out of moneys served on all the banks in which he had reason to believe the company carried a balance. Among these are the Bankers' Trust Company, the Hanover National Bank, the National Park Bank, the New York State Bank, the Fourth National Bank, the Colonial Bank, the Columbia Bank, the Seaboard National Bank, the Long Island Loan and Trust Company, and several safe deposit companies. Copies of the injunction were also served on several Stock Exchange houses with whom the company had dealings.

Judge Lacombe, in the United States Circuit Court heard argument yesterday on a motion to discharge receivers appointed for the Haight & Freese Company. Franklin Bien, as counsel for the Haight & Freese Company, argued that the Federal courts of Massachusetts had not the power or jurisdiction to appoint a receiver for a corporation in New York. Mr. Bien also offered to deposit in cash with the court $3,500, being the amount of the claim upon which the receiver was appointed. Judge Lacombe, however, refused to discharge the receiver or change the injunction restraining banks and trust companies from paying over assets of the company. Judge Lacombe also stated that, in view of the illness of Walter D. Edmonds, who was appointed receiver of Haight & Freese, he would substitute in his place Henry R. Robinson, a lawyer.

Yesterday morning there was a long line of customers, men and women, at the offices of the Haight & Freese Company. They demanded admittance, but a sign referred them to the receiver's office. The receiver took in charge the company's balance at the Seaboard National Bank, which amounted to $27,500. It was rumored that $200,000 in assets had been found on deposit with the Long Island Loan and Trust Company.

RAID ON BROKERS' OFFICES.

Eight Arrested on Customer's Charge Against Bernstein & Co.

Detectives from the Central Office late yesterday arrested eight men, officers and employes of Bernstein & Co., stock brokers, who have a suite of rooms at 350 Broadway. All the men were charged with violating Section 343 of the Penal Code, which relates to misappropriating money placed in their possession. Those arrested were Alfred Bernstein, living at the Hotel Balmoral, said to be the President of the firm; Benjamin Benedict, living at the same place, said to be the Vice President of the firm; Michael J. Keenan, 687 Amsterdam Avenue; Thomas Meham, 89 State Street, Brooklyn; John R. Lewin, 401 West Twenty-third Street; Thomas Waters, 756 St. John's Place, Brooklyn; Thomas G. Doyle, 11 St. Paul's Avenue, Jersey City, and Leopold Katz, 2,184 Fulton Street, Brooklyn.

The firm, according to the police, is incorporated under the laws of this State, with Bernstein and Benedict as President and Vice President, and Eli Hamlin Secretary and Treasurer. The police say that Hamlin left the firm some time ago.

The arrests were made on the complaint of L. O. Anton of 231 West Thirty-fourth Street. He alleges, according to the police, that he started an account with the firm last March, purchasing stock on a two-point margin. He says he invested $90 with the firm and when on March 15 he asked for an accounting he alleges that he was told that he owed them $12. Instead, he alleges, his winnings were $30, and they should have paid him $80. Mr. Anton further alleges, the police say, that the firm quoted the price of stocks 3 per cent. lower than they were quoted in the newspapers.

Detective Sergeant McConville, who worked up the case, said that the men asserted that they were connected with the [illegible] Company, but that it did no deal in stocks at all, but simply in fluctuations of the market daily.

JAMMED BETWEEN CARS.

Three Men Badly Hurt in Peculiar Brooklyn Accident.

Several persons were injured, three of them so seriously that they had to be taken to hospitals, in a collision between trolley cars in Brooklyn last night. The accident was caused by the wheels of the rear truck of one of the cars leaving the track at a curve and smashing into the side of the other car.

The collision occurred at about 6:30 o'clock, and both cars were crowded. An open crosstown car was turning from Raymond Street into Park Avenue and a Park Avenue car was on the downtown track alongside, but going in an opposite direction. Several men were standing on the running boards of both cars. Suddenly the rear truck of the crosstown car slipped and skidded across the cobbles, and the two cars came together, broadside, with a crash. Men were hurled in every direction, and there was great excitement. It was found that three men were jammed between the cars, and it was feared that they had been killed.

Ambulances were called from the Brooklyn and Cumberland Street Hospitals, and with them came three surgeons. The men pinned between the cars were Bartley Radigan, forty-five years old, of 143 Berry Street, whose feet were crushed. Thomas Rossine, fifteen years old, of 212 North Second Street, had his left leg crushed and sustained internal injuries. Joseph Russo, sixteen years old, of 541 Driggs Avenue, had his right foot crushed.

Several others sustained slight injuries, but after treatment they were able to go home in carriages. Both cars were much damaged by the accident.

TO TRY HUMMEL JUNE 5.

Date for Fursman and Steinhardt Cases Not Yet Set.

The date for the trial of Lawyer Abraham Hummel, who, with ex-Judge Edgar L. Fursman, Jr., and Lawyer Benjamin Steinhardt, is under indictment for conspiracy in connection with the annulment of the divorce decree obtained by Mrs. Dodge-Morse from her first husband, was yesterday set for June 5 by Justice Davy in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court. De Lancey Nicoll, who appeared for the defendant, wanted the trial postponed till October, a proposition that was energetically opposed by District Attorney Jerome in person.

Mr. Jerome explained to the court that he was detaining several witnesses of utmost importance to the case at the expense of the county. He also thought that the defendants ought to be anxious to clear themselves.

"They are all attorneys," he said, "and I think that their continued practice of their profession with indictments hanging over their heads is somewhat in the nature of a public scandal."

"As to that," Mr. Nicoll retorted, "it was formerly presumed that even a man under indictment was innocent until proved guilty. As far as I am aware the learned District Attorney has not yet changed the law in that respect."

Mr. Jerome said last night that, unless the defense succeeded in holding over the matter until Fall, Hummel would first be tried on the separate indictment charging him with subornation of perjury. The dates for the trials of Fursman and Steinhardt will not be set for some time to come, as their counsel, ex-Judge D Cady Herrick and John R. Doe Passos, are unable to appear at the present time.

PADEREWSKI SAILS.

Going to Take Long Rest—Mrs. Patrick Campbell Also on the Oceanic.

Ignace Paderewski, the pianist; his wife, and her son, W. C. Gorski, sailed yesterday for Liverpool on the White Star Line steamship Oceanic. Paderewski, who broke down during his American tour, appeared to be in good condition as he shook hands with his friends on the Oceanic's deck.

"I am going to London," he said, "and from there I will cross to France, going to Paris. After a short stay there I will go to my home in Switzerland, where I will rest, away from business and from worry.

"I cannot say now just when I will return to America. I have an offer from the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play with them on tour, but of that I cannot speak at this time."

Mrs. Patrick Campbell, the actress, was also among the passengers on the Oceanic.

"SPATTY" McBRIDE'S WELL.

A Pennsylvania Character Drills Into a Gusher at Butler.

Special to The New York Times.

BUTLER, Penn., May 10.—H. McBride, known as "Spatty," a street merchant and follower of country fairs, last night drilled in an oil well on the Dr. Waldron farm, three miles from this city, which is to-day pumping 3,000 barrels of oil every twenty-four hours. The town is in a lively state of excitement to-day, and people are flocking to see the well.

The bit was drilled only five feet into the fourth sand, and all the tools have been left standing in the hole, but notwithstanding this, the well is flowing 120 barrels an hour. The sand is said to be forty feet thick.

McBride, who took the lease from Waldron, organized the company and drilled the well. He has refused $250,000 for the well and the leases for 240 acres held by him and his colleagues.

TO EDUCATE A BOY HERO.

Helen Gould Interests Herself in Lad Who Saved a Train.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, May 10.—Helen Gould has succeeded in inducing Leroy I. Dixon, the San Juan ranchman's son who saved a Rio Grande passenger train from wreck last Fall, to accept a reward in the shape of a college education. General Manager Schlacks gave the boy a life pass, and with other officials of the road and trainmen with whom the boy was acquainted urged the boy to accept an education, but he refused until Miss Gould wrote him a letter. He is to have his choice of universities.

Dixon was on the way to school five miles from his cabin home when he saw a huge mass of rock on the track and far down the canon he heard the whistle of the approaching train. The boy scrambled down the mountain side and ran down the track waving his handkerchief. Engineer McCabe saw him in time to stop the train twenty feet from the rockslide.

Miss Boardman's Body Arrives.

The body of Miss Geraldine Boardman, daughter of A. B. Boardman, arrived here yesterday on the steamship Koenig Albert. Miss Boardman died from a fall through a skylight of the Hotel de Neville at Florence, Italy. Her pet dog had strayed upon the roof of the hotel, and Miss Boardman, in trying to recover it, fell. On the same ship came the body of A. C. Collington, an American, who died abroad, and another body sent home by the American Consul at Gibraltar.

PENRHYN WON LAUREATE A HEAD FROM WOOLWICH

Feature Race at Belmont Park Produced a Close Finish.

NEW YORK TOOK HANDICAP

Arlan, in the Steeplechase, Was Victor in Easy Style—Four Post Favorites Defeated.

When Penrhyn, a new comer among the two-year-olds, squeezed home first for the Laureate Stakes at Belmont Park yesterday the majority of the horsemen who witnessed his head victory over Woolwich agreed that Penrhyn is a colt that will figure in the stakes later in the season. The colt carried the colors of the Cincinnati turfman, H. M. Zeigler, in their first appearance this season, and though he was backed by his stable, was one of the outsiders in the field of seven that ran for the Laureate, five furlongs down the straight, the feature event of the afternoon's programme.

Penrhyn is one of the horses that Mr. Ziegler's trainer, Charles Hughes, has spent a good part of the Spring in educating to run the "wrong way," with the rail to his right, over the Sheepshead Bay training track, and though the race was run down the straight, the education stood the colt in good stead, as he was about the only horse in the contest that ran true and straight. From the moment that the barrier was lifted the horses were weaving back and forth, Woolwich, which had the outside position, swerving across the track and back at the start, while Veronese, on the inside, dodged in and out among the other horses. Penrhyn was carried out on the track by the general movement, but settled down to running at once, and kept to his work to the end. Woolwich had speed enough to get to the front again in spite of his swerving, and still wriggling in and out led into the last furlong, where Penrhyn went up to him, and fought it out to the winning post. Both horses were under the whip at the end, and Penrhyn showed the stouter heart, as he hung on gallantly, and nosed out his seasoned opponent, winning by a short head.

The mile and a furlong handicap furnished something of a novelty even in all the newness of the Belmont Park track, for this race, the last on the programme, was the first that ever has been run over the Belmont Stakes course. The start was made in the middle of the back stretch of the training track, with a course like a letter S, to be covered in the journey to the regular winning post, and the race was well in progress before a great many of the spectators discovered where the horses were.

Two horses in the seven that ran for the steeplechase fell, and as the favorite practically was left at the post so badly did he get away, the contest was between Champs Elysees and Arlan, Champs Elysees leading to the last jump, where Arlan took command and won, pulling up, by two lengths. Dromedary, favorite at even money, never got near the leaders, while Chero, a half brother to Delhi, badly injured Jockey Rodrock by falling at the Liverpool in front of the stand. Summary:

VANDERBILT HORSES WON.

Took the Blue Ribbon Honors at Brooklyn's Driving Club Show.

Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt made havoc among the blue ribbons last night at the annual horse show of the Riding and Driving Club of Brooklyn. His horses, entered under the name of the Oakland Farm, his Newport estate, were in nearly every instance up to the mark. It was in the showing of road teams to coaches that Mr. Vanderbilt scored the hit of the night with the large and fashionable crowd of spectators that wedged itself into every nook and cranny of the big building, situated at the junction of the Prospect Park Plaza and Flatbush Avenue. As the hitch of four beautiful grays came into the ring, showing action and spirit, the crowd recognized the new Belmont Park coach of Mr. Vanderbilt, and applauded lustily. Its trappings were complete, even to the extra cock horse ridden by a groom, and easily won the coveted blue ribbon.

With Rustling Silk and Full Dress, a perfectly matched pair of bays, Mr. Vanderbilt took the ribbon in the class for pairs shown to Stanhopes. His driving was not so good in this as it was when he handled the reins over the four-in-hand, but he put the pair through their paces well enough to get the award over Jay F. Carlisle's Revenue and Eloquence. Mr. Vanderbilt also won in the tandem class with Rustling Silk and Polly Prim, the latter as wheeler. The summary:

Class for Horses in Harness.—Horses 14.2 hands and not exceeding 15, to be shown to a light two or four wheeled vehicle—First prize $100, second $50, and third $25—Won by Newsboy, chestnut gelding, 14.3, 8 years, owned by Mrs. John Gerken; second, Mignonette, chestnut mare, 15, 7 years, owned by John Kerr Branch; third, Fascination, chestnut gelding, 15, 8 years, owned by Mrs. J. One of the best golf tournaments ever held under the auspices of the University Club took place yesterday on the links of St. Andrew's Golf Club, near Chauncey, Westchester County. He deserved his honor, for he won from scratch, his total for the double round being 159 strokes, being both the best gross and net score of the day. Austen G. GAME LASTED 18 INNINGS.

Princeton Beats Amherst by 1 to 0 in a Remarkable Contest.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., May 10.—For eighteen hard-fought innings Princeton and Amherst battled for baseball supremacy to-day in a game abounding in exciting plays and sensational fielding, the "Tigers" finally winning by the score of 1 to 0. The game was quickly played, occupying but two hours and forty minutes.

Princeton scored the winning run in the eighteenth inning. Doyle, who had already made three hits, reached first base when Beach allowed his hot grounder to go through him. Reid tried to sacrifice, but Doyle was thrown out at second, and Reid reached first on the fielder's choice. Heim's base on balls advanced Reid to second, and a passed ball by Danahey allowed him to reach third. Capt. Wells then came to the bat. Reid made a dash for the plate and Wells tapped the first ball pitched to Kelliher, who threw it to Danahey, but Reid had crossed the plate before the ball got there and the game was won. The score:

St. Nicholas Rink Tennis Matches.

After a series of lively lawn tennis matches three of the women players reached the semi-final round of the Class A championship tournament yesterday on the canvas-covered courts of the St. Nicholas Rink. The winning players were Miss Louise Scott, Mrs. Barger-Wallach of the Tuxedo Club, and Miss Gertrude Fell. All of these women displayed remarkable skill at the game and won in straight sets over their opponents, with the exception of Miss Fell, who lost the first set of her match to Miss Juliet Adee, as the latter proved unusually speedy and accurate during the first part of the competition.

As an extra feature of the day's play Holcomb Ward, the National champion in the singles, met his successful opponent of the previous day, the ex-champion, Malcolm D. Whitman, and defeated him handily in straight sets. Summary:

Women's Class A Championship Singles. Second Round—Mrs. Barger-Wallach defeated Miss Pauline Robinson, by default.

Third Round—Miss Louise Scott defeated Mrs. Alexander Potter, 6-4, 6-2; Mrs. Barger-Wallach defeated Miss Juliet Adee, 4-6, 6-4, 6-3; Miss Gertrude Fell defeated Miss [illegible]

New Yorks Pull Victory Off in Ninth Inning by 4 to 3.

The St. Louis team gave the champions of the National League another interesting contest at the Polo Grounds yesterday, but the visitors were beaten in the last inning by one run, due to a change of pitchers and giving a base on balls to Bresnahan, who batted in the place of Ames, and singles by Bowerman and Donlin.

The first really exciting situation in the contest occurred when the visitors made their appearance at the bat in the ninth inning. The score then stood 3 to 1 in favor of the champions, and when Dunleavy reached first base on a safe hit toward third base a feeling of uneasiness seemed to prevail throughout the grounds. Manager Burke then hit toward the pitcher's box, and Ames made a good stop and throw to catch Dunleavy at second. But the latter got a good start, made a fine slide, and was declared safe. Grady placed a ball in Dahlen's hands, but the best that could be done was to put Burke out at second. In the meantime Dunleavy had landed on third. McFarland was thrown out by Gilbert to McGann, but Dunleavy scored, and Grady got to second. Shannon hit a fast ball over Ames's head into centre field, and although Donlin made a good throw to the plate, Grady sailed the tying run. Arndt, the newcomer, was not equal to the occasion, and retired the side by being thrown out from second base to first. The score:

Inability to hit Harper and ragged fielding lost the second game for the Brooklyns against Cincinnati yesterday. Stricklett was hit freely in the second inning by Odwell, Huggins, and Harper, all of whom scored triples, and with a base on balls three runs were tallied, which won the game. Steinfeldt's fielding was a feature. The score:

EVEN BREAK AT BOSTON.

BOSTON, May 10.—Boston and Chicago broke even in a double-header to-day. In the first game Boston batted Weimer out of the box in the first inning and won in the ninth on four consecutive singles. In the second game neither team could do any effective hitting, but Willhelm's bases on balls and Boston's errors were costly, three of the visitors' four runs resulting therefrom. In the fifth inning of the first game Raymer was spiked and retired in favor of Lauterborn. The scores:

TAMMANY CLUB WANTS EXTRA SESSION ON GAS

Lantry's District Favors Big Municipal Plant, Too.

FOR RIKER'S ISLAND SITE

Republicans Criticised Harshly for Killing 80-Cent Bill, but Little Is Said of Tammany Men.

An extra session of the Legislature to act on the gas question is demanded by the Mohican Club, 211 East Forty-fifth Street, the Tammany organization of the Twenty-second Assembly District, which met last night and outlined its views in a set of resolutions. Francis J. Lantry, Commissioner of Correction, is the district leader. The speakers roundly scored the Republican legislators, and said they were in a corrupt alliance with the gas monopolies. The scheme for a central municipal lighting plant on Riker's Island was broached, and the resolution in favor of it was adopted with cheers.

"We recommend," the resolutions say, "that sufficient area be set apart on Riker's Island for one large central lighting plant. Through the initiative and executive ability of the Hon. Francis J. Lantry, Commissioner of Correction, and with the co-operation of the Street Cleaning Department, a large tract of valuable land has been gained to the city on this island, and it is available at once for the purpose suggested. Riker's Island is so situated that it may be regarded as the territorial centre of our interborough government, and there is no piece of property with sufficient area nearer the four great boroughs of Manhattan, the Bronx, Brooklyn, and Queens than is that ground.

"While practically adjacent to these boroughs, it is yet so separated from them that none of them could be injuriously affected by the objectionable features ordinarily incident to the manufacture of gas or to the installation of any system of lighting."

Commissioner J. Lantry presided at the meeting, and made one of the warmest speeches in favor of municipal lighting. He said he thought good Democrats ought to get together and say what they think about these matters, and make the legislators do the people's will. A set of resolutions adopted contained this passage:

"We denounce the palpable attempts of the State Legislature, controlled as it is by an overwhelming majority, to obstruct these most important public improvements, [municipal gas plants,] and to refuse to this city the proper measure of home rule to fully carry out these most desirable projects. We demand that the Legislature be convened in special session to adopt necessary legislation, not alone to secure to the city the proper means of installing its own plant, but also to secure to the citizens of this great community and the consumers of gas therein, the supply thereof at a just and equitable price per thousand feet, instead of permitting them to be subjected to the unreasonable and extortionate price which is now exacted by the gas monopoly of this city.

"We cannot but look upon any refusal to convene the Legislature in extra session for this necessary and just purpose except as conclusive evidence of a corrupt alliance and understanding between the managers of the Republican Party on one hand and the gas monopolies on the other, to secure political and pecuniary advantages to themselves and to deprive the gas consumers of this city of their just rights.

"To Mayor McClellan belongs the credit of taking the matter out of the realm of theory and debate and bringing it to the practical situation whereby it has been made possible for the city to acquire and operate its own public lighting system and plant, and we pledge our hearty support to his Honor and the local authorities in securing to the city the prompt and complete execution of their plans for the city ownership and control of its lighting system."

Not much was said in the meeting about the Tammany men who voted with the Republicans against cheaper gas. But afterward several of the leaders said that the Senators would hear from the voters at the next primaries.

GAS DEFEAT PLEASES STOKES.

Stirs Public and Brings Municipal Ownership Nearer, He Says.

J. G. Phelps Stokes, who, according to gossip in political circles, is likely to be the candidate for the municipal ownership forces for Mayor, yesterday sent a telegram to the Municipal Ownership League at 1,780 Broadway about the defeat of the eighty-cent gas bill. He said:

"The defeat of the eighty-cent gas bill should not be regarded as unfortunate. Its passing would have quieted public indignation at the continued extortions of the gas corporation and postponed as unnecessary the establishment of adequate gas works by the city. As has been shown recently, illuminating gas of a high quality can be produced and distributed throughout New York at a cost of 50 cents per thousand feet. The passage of the eighty-cent bill would have rendered the people more tolerant of continued abuses. With or without the passage of that bill, the present gas corporation will continue to tax the people on a scale wholly disproportionate to the value of the services rendered. By paying the combine 100 per cent. profit for a while longer, buying gas at $1 a thousand cubic feet, the public will come to realize sooner than it otherwise would the folly of permitting the private ownership of public corporations.

"Let public indignation at the present extortions increase and continue rather than attempt to suppress it with soothing syrup legislation, and let us bend every effort to elect next November municipal officers who can be relied upon to do everything that can be done to bring about by the earliest possible date municipal ownership and operation of such public gas works and other utilities as are required to supply both public and private needs."

PUT GAS UP TO HIGGINS.

Republicans Want Light Commission Pledged to 80-Cent Rate.

If assurance is obtained from Gov. Higgins that the men he appoints members of the State Lighting Commission will be pledged to adopt the recommendation of the Stevens committee and give New York City 80-cent gas, the agitation to have the Governor include gas in the subjects to be considered by the Legislature at the special session will be dropped by the Republican leaders.

President Halpin of the Republican County Committee said yesterday that, in his opinion, the Republicans would be in a better position for the municipal campaign if a Republican State commission gave New York cheaper gas than they would be if a reduction were obtained by the votes of Tammany as well as Republican Senators.

Mr. Halpin does not believe that any of the up-State Republicans who voted against the 80-cent bill could be converted if the measure were brought up again at the special session, and its only chance of passing therefore, in his judgment, would be by the winning over of Tammany Senators who aided in killing it at the regular session.

It is generally admitted in Republican circles that the reduction of the price of gas to 80 cents by the State Commission is absolutely essential to insure the Republicans a possible chance in the city election.

Say Higgins Will Veto Franchise Bill.

Congressman Herbert Parsons, Homer Folks, and P. Tecumseh Sherman, the new Labor Commissioner, all former members of the Board of Aldermen, will call upon Gov. Higgins at Albany, on his return from Cambridge Springs, and urge him to veto the bill taking the franchise power from the Aldermen. Alderman Sullivan and several other members of the board yesterday expressed the belief that the Governor would veto the bill. They said they based their opinion on some things they had heard since the adjournment of the Legislature.

Doctors Condemn Democratic Senators

The East Side Physicians' Club, composed of doctors, dentists, and druggists, passed resolutions last night condemning the Democratic Senators from this county for having defeated the eighty-cent gas bill.

CAPT. GODDARD TAKES REST.

Health Gives Way and Physician Orders a Holiday.

Capt. F. Norton Goddard, who, as head of the Anti-Policy Society was chiefly instrumental in sending "Al" Adams to prison and who is known also for his manifold civic and philanthropic activities, has been compelled to cease all work and to seek complete rest.

Friends and business associates of Capt. Goddard have noticed for some time that he was far from well, but the breakdown did not take place until about three weeks ago.

Capt. Goddard is an indefatigable worker who crowded as many duties as he possibly could into every waking hour and denied himself a vacation for years and years. Now on his physician's advice he is resting near this city with his family and is said to be doing comparatively well.

At the office of Capt. Goddard's firm, J. W. Goddard & Sons, W. A. Baldwin, one of his partners, said yesterday:

"The stories about Capt. Goddard being in a sanitarium are utterly ridiculous and outrageous. He is in the country with his wife and family and is feeling first rate.

"Capt. Goddard, in addition to attending to his business affairs, which are considerable, has for years interested himself in reform and civic movements, with the result that he has been overworked.

"When inquiries have been made for him at the office we have said we would forward messages or mail. Perhaps this alone may have furnished the foundation for the absurd story printed this afternoon that he was in a sanitarium, although I don't see why it should. We expect Capt. Goddard here the last week in May or the first week in June. He could return tomorrow with perfect safety to his health."

WOODBURY REVIEWS TROOPS.

Street Cleaning Commissioner Takes Mayor's Place at Military Tourney.

Street Cleaning Commissioner J. McGraw Woodbury took Mayor McClellan's place as the reviewing officer last night at the Military and Athletic Tournament in Madison Square Garden. The seats and boxes were practically all filled when the soldiers marched in, and as the reviewing party entered the Garden from the Madison Avenue side there was an immediate craning of necks and rising among the spectators to catch sight of the Mayor. The crowd was manifestly chagrined at his absence, but this momentary disappointment being over, the events of the evening were heartily enjoyed.

The review went off without a hitch, being decidedly the best since the opening of the show. The Canadian Highlanders wore their fatigue uniform, with their natty Scotch caps, a feather saucily stuck in the side. They were less resplendent in this working costume of dull gray than in their full dress uniform of kilts, red coats, and bare knees; but they made a fine appearance.

The soldiers had a hard time of it yesterday, for, besides the long evening exhibition, there was a matinee. Gen. George Moore Smith was the reviewing officer in the afternoon. Over a thousand children from a number of charitable institutions in the city witnessed the afternoon's performance.

The athletic events were all well contested. The league record in the obstacle race was beaten in the three trial heats, and the Twelfth Regiment won the tie in the tug of war pull-off with the First Naval Battalion. It was a hard fight and the winners only lead by an inch. The summaries:

100-Yard Dash, Military Championship.—First heat—Won by S. E. Peabody, Twenty-second Regiment; J. J. Danahar, Twenty-second Regiment, second. Time—0:11. Second heat—Won by D. PULLS NO USE, SAYS McADOO.

Declares He Will Make Police Promotions Strictly on Merit.

Police Commissioner McAdoo issued a statement yesterday warning aspirants for the places made vacant by Tuesday's removals that attempts to employ political influence would be to their disadvantage.

"There is one sure way," the Commissioner wrote, "by which a police officer can prevent his promotion with me, and that is to attempt to work any pull, personal or otherwise, or to give me a sort of football rush for the place. These promotions will be made strictly on merit, and solely from the police and proper point of view.

"I don't care so much what people say about the candidates. What I want to know is what they have done, what they are doing, and what kind of stuff is in them for this kind of work. Recommendations as to character are good enough, but a good record is better—a record which shows ability and character."

MAYOR ACCEPTS BILL FOR WATER COMMISSION

Not Satisfactory, He Writes, but Best City Could Get.

IS READY TO FILL PLACES

John F. Cowan, a Tammany Leader, Appointed to Succeed W. E. Curtis as Aqueduct Commissioner.

Mayor McClellan took three important steps yesterday in connection with the development of the city's water supply. He announced his approval of the legislative bill providing for a municipal commission to carry on the one-hundred-million-dollar improvement work, and then he communicated with the Chamber of Commerce, the Board of Fire Underwriters, and the Manufacturers' Association, asking those bodies each to recommend three men for appointment on the commission, the Mayor pledging himself to name one Commissioner from each list submitted. After this the Mayor announced the appointment of John F. Cowan to be a member of the Aqueduct Commission to succeed William E. Curtis, resigned.

Early in the afternoon the Mayor held a hearing on the water bill which had come to him from Albany, but, contrary to expectation, no one appeared either for or against the measure. Later in the day the Mayor announced that he had approved the bill and had returned it to Albany with the following memorandum:

"The bill as it is now presented to me is in many respects different from that which at my request was introduced in the Legislature over four months ago. It bears evidence of additions and omissions which represent the concessions to which the city was obliged to consent in order to secure any bill to provide for an additional water supply.

"I know the uselessness of complaint, but I wish to record the fact that this bill and the one originally introduced show by contrast what we sought and what we received, so that if supplemental legislation be necessary later on it cannot be urged that this measure represents fully the claims of New York City.

"I accept the bill on behalf of the city, and extend the thanks of the city to those who, seeking its welfare, endeavored to promote this legislation."

From the fact that Commissioner Curtis resigned from the Aqueduct Board it was inferred at City Hall yesterday that he would in all probability be recommended for a place on the new Water Commission. Mr. Curtis sent to the Mayor his resignation as an Aqueduct Commissioner some time ago, and on April 28 requested that it be accepted by May 10. The Mayor wrote to Mr. Curtis as follows:

"I sincerely regret that the city is to lose your services, and I wish to take this occasion personally to thank you for the many courtesies which have marked our official relations."

Mr. Cowan, who succeeds Mr. Curtis, is the Tammany leader on the south side of the Thirty-fourth Assembly District. He was warmly recommended for the appointment by ex-District Attorney Eugene A. Philbin and by ex-Attorney General John Cunneen. Mr. Cowan was an Assistant District Attorney under Mr. Philbin, and also had been a Deputy Attorney General under Mr. Cunneen, having been in charge of the New York office of the State's Law Department. In announcing his appointment to Mr. Cowan the Mayor said to him:

"Under the law I have to select a Democrat. I have therefore chosen you to be an Aqueduct Commissioner in place of Mr. Curtis, resigned. The public has had just cause to complain of this board, its shifting policies, and its indecision at critical times. You have no connection with its past. Go into the board, and do your best to advance its work to a speedy completion."

In spite of anything we can say there will be a lot of "mercerized cotton" clothing sold and worn this season.

There are still a good many clothiers who are more anxious to get your money than to give you good value for it. There are also a lot of men who can't withstand the temptation of a dollar or two difference in price, even when they know they're losing in quality and service much more than they save in cash.

You, who believe in genuine things, and detest sham, and despise dishonesty all the more when it tries to look honest—don't let these things worry you. It takes all kinds of people to make a world; and all kinds of clothes to clothe them.

You go on wearing all-wool clothes and we'll go on making them; there's enough of you for us. Our label means all-wool, and a lot of other genuine things in clothes; it's a small thing to look for, a big thing to find.

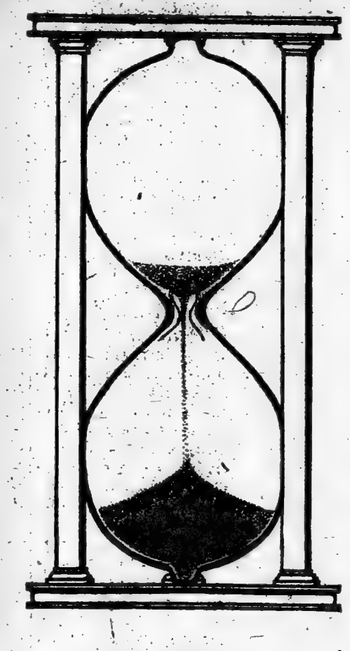
The sands are almost out!



Only three days more to buy

at 43% Discount.

THE time is short—the sands in the hour-glass have almost run out.

Very soon the last of them will have gone, the life of the sands will be ended.

In the same way will come to an end the chance to subscribe for the first great world-history at almost half the regular prices. Monday, May 15th, at midnight, the lists must be closed in New York. The days will become hours and every hour is bringing nearer the time to close the offer at 43 per cent. discount.

The hour-glass calls your attention to the passing of an opportunity.

Do you not remember that famous legend of the books of the Sibyl—how, when the old hag came to Tarquin the Proud with a bundle of nine books under her arm, he said to her: "The price is too high" (whereas they were extremely cheap), and the old woman went away? The next day she came back and asked him to pay the same price for six of the books, but as he did not rise to the occasion, she again went away, and on her return sold him three of the books at the price originally asked for the nine! Years after the scribes discovered the wonderful value of these priceless volumes. Now, Tarquin could have had them all at a great bargain, but he failed to seize the opportunity.

YOU MUST ACT AT ONCE.

Don't let the mistake of the old Roman be repeated in your case.

The Outlook is offering "The Historians' History of the World" for the first time at a price which is 43 per cent. less than its real and future value. Don't defer subscribing to this, one of the three great standard works of literature and knowledge, until the price has been almost doubled. Don't put off subscribing for a day or so, because on Monday, May 15th, at midnight, the present introductory prices must be abolished.

THE END OF THE OFFER.

The edition now offered is limited not only as to the date of subscription, but as to the number of sets which can be supplied at the present prices. We have printed for the American market only nine thousand sets, but from present indications they will certainly all be taken. Our announcement of the abolition of the discount of 43 per cent. has brought an extraordinary number of applications for specimen volumes; more, in fact, than we could supply at once. The great public interest in the history at the eleventh hour leads us to believe that the present edition will be largely oversubscribed.

The Outlook plan of sale of this work has been the most successful innovation the publishing world has known in many years. No agents are employed, and no commissions have to be paid. This method of sale direct from publisher to buyer has made it possible to offer the work at almost one-half of what it would cost if sold in the ordinary way, through the trade with agents' commissions added.

The reduction from regular prices, amounting to 43 per cent., has attracted thousands of book-buyers who have been quick to appreciate a bargain, and who, by their co-operation have enabled The Outlook to sell the work, during publication, at this large reduction. Now, that the history is finally completed, the discount will be withdrawn on May 15th, and those who subscribe after that date will be required to pay a higher price.

HELD UP.

President ROOSEVELT was never more thoroughly himself, he never put more of his heart and soul and thought into a speech, than when he addressed the Denver Chamber of Commerce on Monday evening. This passage concerning the Panama escapade, for instance, is highly typical, characteristic, and enlightening:

> It was perhaps unnecessary for me to say that I am perfectly aware that many most admirable gentlemen disagreed with me in my action toward the Panama Canal, but I am in an unrepentant frame of mind. The ethical conception upon which I acted was that I did not intend that Uncle Sam should be held up.

Would it not be better to leave ethics out of the question? Colombia declined to ratify the Hay-Herran treaty conferring upon us the right to build and operate the Panama Canal. It is to this refusal that the President refers when he speaks about Uncle Sam being "held up." The Republic of Colombia is a free, independent, and sovereign nation, and in the eye of international law and usage stands upon a plane of equality with ourselves. It had the unquestionable right to ratify or not to ratify the treaty. If withholding ratification of a treaty negotiated and agreed upon by Ministers of State or diplomats is holding up, then we "held up" England when our Senate refused to ratify the Hay-Pauncefote treaty doing away with the inconvenient restrictions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. According to the "ethical" doctrine now laid down by Mr. ROOSEVELT, England would then have been justified in going her own gait on the Isthmus, regardless of existing treaty obligations. President ROOSEVELT himself has recently "held up" half a dozen powerful and friendly nations by refusing to take the necessary steps to procure their assent to certain amendments made by the Senate in the arbitrati treaties negotiated by Secretary HAY. "Hold-ups" of this nature are so common that if they were followed by such reprisals and acts of war as Mr. ROOSEVELT judged to be appropriate penalties for the misbehavior of Colombia, this usually peaceful world would be transformed into a scene of frightful carnage.

On the whole, it is better to leave ethics out of the question. It would have been safer for the President to put it in this way: I wanted this thing done; I did it, therefore it is right. The statement is enlightening, however. In the interests of candor it is well that the President should frankly avow the nature of his proceedings on the Isthmus. It was a punitive expedition upon which he sent our troops and ships. Colombia had attempted to "hold up" Uncle Sam, and Uncle Sam, represented by President ROOSEVELT, punished her insolence by taking away her most interesting and desirable province, by forbidding her troops to come anywhere within fifty miles of the scene of an open revolt against her authority among her own citizens, by setting up the revolted province as an independent State, and forthwith recognizing it. These proceedings were quite outside the domain of law. The President, in effect, admits it. They were entered upon and accomplished because of the President's displeasure with Colombia for exercising her sovereign right to refuse ratification of a treaty.

Somebody else is now being "held up" on the Isthmus. The President says that when the canal is open for traffic he thinks "it will have a very important regulatory effect in connection with the transcontinental commerce of the republic"; the great railroads will then "have to revise their way of looking at the interests of certain inland cities." Why does not the revising begin? The San Francisco Chamber of Commerce sent to Secretary TAFT the other day for the information of the President a report upon the workings of the contract in restraint of trade now existing between the transcontinental railroads and the Panama Railroad, which is the property of the Government. This report declares that the present freight schedule by the way of Panama "is apparently based on the overland railroad freight schedule." The differential in favor of the Panama Railroad is so nicely adjusted that, having in view the longer time of transit and the transshipment of merchandise at each terminus of the [illegible] railroad, the saving is not sufficient to attract the shipper. It was the intention to adjust [illegible] the prosperity of the country by the [illegible] competition of the Panama Railroad. It appears therefore that the transcontinental commerce of the Nation and our commerce with the West Coast of South America is "held up" by this compact, which, being void from the beginning and therefore unlawful, the President might have declared inoperative from the day when the control of the Panama Railroad was purchased from the Frenchmen. Here is a task of rate regulation ready for the President's hand. He controls the situation absolutely. How long will he permit commerce to be "held up"?

AT SIXES AND SEVENS.

If the President cannot bring about among his Cabinet advisers a meeting of minds upon the rate regulation question, he may find it advisable to enjoin silence upon them. At present there is a grievous diversity in their public expressions of opinion.

Mr. MORTON, the Secretary of the Navy, said the other day that if rebates and unfair discriminations were stopped the rates would take care of themselves; there would be no need of new legislation. That, of course, is a complete abandonment of the President's position.

Attorney General MOODY and Secretary of War TAFT appear to have adopted a concerted line of action and utterance. Mr. MOODY, in answering Senator ELKINS'S question the other day, declared that since the States have the power "to fix the maximum future charges of carriers by railroads," it must be that Congress has a like power with regard to inter-State commerce. He also said that, "although legislative power, properly speaking, cannot be delegated, the lawmaking power, having enacted into law the standard of charges which shall control, may intrust to an administrative body not exercising in the true sense judicial power the duty to fix rates in conformity with that standard." The maximum standard doctrine was preached by Secretary TAFT at the dinner given by the American Railway Association in Washington on Tuesday evening. He declared that he saw no reason "why a tribunal properly constituted should not be competent in every sense of the word to fix the maximum rate." At least that is the way the press dispatches report him.

Now, the fixing and regulation of railway freight charges by a Federal commission according to a "maximum rate" or in "conformity with a standard" is not at all Mr. ROOSEVELT'S policy in respect to rate fixing. It is no more like the Roosevelt policy than the whimbamper is like the Hyrcan tiger. We select the whimbamper for the purposes of this comparison not only because the animal is unknown in this latitude, but because he is everywhere unknown, and has been, is, and forevermore will be impossible. There is no such animal, and there will be no Federal rate fixing in this country on the maximum or standard plan. So the Moody-Taft theory, like the Morton theory, is destructive to the Roosevelt policy.

No living man could draw a bill establishing a standard of maximum rates which Congress would enact into a law. The laws of the State of New York (Chapter 676 of the Laws of 1892) declare that "no rate of fare for way passengers greater than 2 cents per mile" shall be charged by the New York Central Railroad; and the rate of fare over that railroad, it is declared, "shall continue to be 2 cents per mile and no more, wherever it is restricted to that rate." This is a maximum or standard, but it is applied to one corporation and within the limits of a single State. It was possible for the members of the Legislature to be intimately familiar with traffic conditions upon the New York Central. Congress cannot be in the least degree familiar with railroad traffic conditions in every State in the Union. A maximum freight rate that would be reasonable in the densely settled States of the East would be ruinous in many other parts of the country. A law fixing a standard or maximum charge would either establish a rate so low that it would make impossible the operation of a large part of the railroad mileage of the country, or else so high that the law would be futile.

Mr. MOODY and Mr. TAFT are experienced lawyers. The maximum rate idea probably represents their sincere and loyal attempt to bring the President's rate fixing policy into a decent conformity with the Constitution of the United States as they understand it. The compromise they seem to have adopted certainly does put an end to the quarrel between the President's ideas and the organic law of the Republic, but it accomplishes that end by annihilating the ideas.

CHURCH CONSERVATISM.

The movement now taking shape to array the churches, through the power of organization, in opposition to everything that admits of classification under the name of the "higher criticism," would seem to be extremely ill-advised in the light of modern tendencies and the increasing insistence of intelligent and educated persons upon freedom of thought, even on doctrinal points. In a recent lecture on the history of Christianity, an eminent clergyman, who perhaps would not be gratified to see his name quoted too prominently in a relation which might prove an incitement to some industrious heresy hunter, but who speaks the words of truth and soberness, said:

> Study how, O ye Churches, the sum of [illegible] matter. There are three great [illegible] work creating the world that is [illegible] to be—the spirit of scientific investigation, that will know nothing but the truth; the spirit of democratic revolution, which will trust no one but the people; the spirit of social evolution, which will call no man common or unclean. If the Churches wish for influence in the world that is and is to be, they must master these spirits and make them their own; the Churches must become scientific, democratic, and socialistic. And, if they do so, then the Churches will merge into the Church, and then the Church will no longer be separate from the State nor the State from the Church, but these two will be one flesh.

This merits thoughtful consideration. It is quite possible to carry the spirit of conservatism so far that it becomes merely another name for dogged opposition to progress. If this mistake is made by the orthodox Churches the number of those not orthodox will be likely to increase. Those who find the conclusions of the higher criticism inconvenient may well ask themselves if it be not possible that they are no longer fit to be leaders of thought and teachers of doctrine. It can go far astray, of course, but none discovers this sooner than those who are themselves advanced thinkers, and such a tendency corrects itself easily, naturally, and quickly.

IMPROVED COAL MINING.

Coal production in the United States, according to Mr. WILLIAM R. STEWART in the current number of The Cosmopolitan, has increased since 1850 by 4,180 per cent. Great Britain held the first place in supplying the world with coal up to 1899. Then America seized the primacy, and last year the 600,000 employés engaged in the industry mined 370,000,000 tons, a million tons more than Great Britain, or two-thirds of the output of the globe. The ultimate value of this aggregate of combustible carbon to the retailer is estimated at over $2,000,000,000.

This country is not yet compelled to resort to the European method of deep coal mining, the great veins of anthracite and bituminous coal being usually accessible in the slopes and drifts near the surface. The mines of Pennsylvania betray no appreciable signs of exhaustion, although the production of that State in anthracite alone has amounted approximately to 1,700,000,000 tons since the first shipments in 1820.

With this advantage in natural resources is combined the recent general introduction of thousands of electric and compressed air coal-cutting and boring machines, electric and air-driven motor engines, steel cars, dumping cages, improved screens and mechanical pickers, endless troughs and bucket chains, lighting and power generating plants, telephone systems, and organized fire departments. The use of coal-cutting machines has nearly superseded cutting by hand, showing an increase of over 600 per cent. within ten years, and has reduced the cost of mining by from fifteen to thirty cents a ton. Improvements in every department of coal mining have heightened the efficiency of laborers, cheapened production, and established the supremacy of American methods over European competitors.

Transportation facilities have improved. Six thousand tons of coal recently were loaded upon a coal steamer at Baltimore in six hours, or at the rate of 1,000 tons an hour. Bituminous coal is transported on the Great Lakes at the low charge of thirty cents a ton a thousand miles; about 125 coal steamers, each with a capacity of from 5,000 to 8,000 gross tons, are employed on the lakes in this service. From Pittsburg to New Orleans by water the charge for bituminous coal is fifty cents a ton. Some interesting figures of the tonnage of coal arriving at the various principal cities are given by Mr. STEWART, as indicating the importance of the transportation side of the coal industry:

> Of the lake ports, Buffalo last year handled about 8,300,000 tons; Cleveland, about 5,500,000 tons; Toledo, 6,700,000 tons; Erie, 1,800,000 tons; Ashtabula, 1,500,000 tons; Milwaukee, 1,800,000 tons; Duluth-Superior, 3,900,000 tons, and Chicago, 10,000,000 tons. Of the cities on the Mississippi and its tributaries, Pittsburg handled about 26,000,000 tons; Cincinnati, about 3,000,000 tons; St. Louis, 4,700,000 tons; Louisville, 1,600,000 tons, and New Orleans, 2,500,000 tons. There were loaded at shipping ports on the Atlantic; Hampton Roads, about 4,800,000 tons; Baltimore, about 4,700,000 tons; Philadelphia, 13,000,000 tons, and New York ports, 17,000,000 tons. Boston got 4,700,000 tons, and Providence, 1,800,000 tons.

BRAIN WORK AND LONGEVITY.

It begins to be understood by students of vital statistics that mental activity, instead of being an exhausting process tending to shorten life, is in the highest degree conducive to longevity if not complicated by excesses or intensified by the uncompensated friction of worry. In a case lately on trial in London involving damages for softening of the brain attributed to an accident for which a corporation was responsible, this subject was very fully ventilated and some of the most accomplished experts in England gave testimony.

A consensus of opinion seemed to show that all alienists are agreed that the best way to keep the brain in good condition is to use it to the safe limit of its capacity. One eminent specialist called attention to the fact that in the rural districts of England probably a third of the agricultural laborers who survive the age of thirty or thirty-five die of paresis. The utter stagnation of agricultural communities in England, and to some extent in other countries, may account in some measure for the development of paresis in those past middle life and for insanity among women. The physiological reason for the statistical longevity of brain workers is that the brain needs blood to keep it in health, and that thinking induces the free circulation of blood through the brain tissues. Dr. DUKE, one of the leading British specialists in diseases of the brain, testified that in his judgment a normal brain should never be permitted to rest except during sleep, and that the amount of sleep needed is usually less than is commonly supposed. He strongly advised that every one should have a hobby, and that to this he should devote what would otherwise be his leisure—not in a casual and dilettante way, but seriously, as if it were the chief concern of life. He favored for professional men the study of whist or chess problems, or, if these do not interest them, continued investigation in some branch of science. The intellectual man who consumes surplus tissue in intense mental application has none to waste in the gratification of vices or the cultivation of bad habits of any kind. It may also be doubted if, as the rule, he has much to spare for exercise taken simply for the sake of exercising.

If the members of the Board of Aldermen think they can "tie up" for six years, more or less, the undertaking of the new subways required by the people of New York by litigation to test the constitutionality of the legislation that deprived them of their control of local franchises, they have lively imaginations. The courts would make short work of any scheme to subordinate the public interest to the ends of a body which had abused its powers until the evil of the situation had become intolerable.

Persons interested in founding a new hospital in the most densely crowded district of the east side—the district between Houston and Fourteenth Streets, the Bowery and the East River—will have a hearing this afternoon before Dr. STEPHEN SMITH, Vice President of the State Board of Charities, sitting as a Commissioner for the Supreme Court to determine the legality and propriety of the application. This is one of the admirable charities which has its origin and will find its chief support among the people intended to be most immediately benefited. There is already one hospital under Jewish management in the district described, the Beth Israel, on Cherry Street, which is doing an excellent work. It is, however, wholly inadequate to the demands upon it, having only one hundred beds. Mount Sinai and Lebanon Hospitals are far up town, and while in the highest degree useful, they do not quite meet the emergency requirements of the lower east side. The Hebrew hospitals are among the most ably managed and wisely administered institutions in New York, and to add another to the list, for which the name Beth Jacob Joseph has been chosen, and to establish it in the crowded district to which it will chiefly minister, will be a public benefit.

GO SOUTH, YOUNG IMMIGRANT.

Georgia's Efforts to Get Settlers the Text for a Sermon.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your timely editorial in this morning's issue, "Pushcarts and Immigration," is a subject that ought to be followed up by the people of New York. One of the solutions of the overcrowding of this city by increased immigration lies in the movement about to be put in operation by the State of Georgia, whereby the better class of immigrants and settlers generally will be invited to locate in that section under advantageous terms.

If the press of the various languages in New York would take up this matter, showing the advantage of moving South, it would result beneficially to the immigrant and his family and prevent the overcrowding of the city. In any of the Southern States to-day there is wide opportunity for the mechanic or agriculturist. I mention Georgia more particularly, as the great resources and advantages offered are known to me minutely, and I am serving that State in its industrial upbuilding. THE TIMES, with its popularity, seems one of the channels in which this vital subject ought to be prominently discussed.

DAVID ROBINSON,
Industrial Commissioner of Georgia.

Higher Duty on Dead Rabbits.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Secretary of the Treasury changed the rate of duty on "dead rabbits" last week. Theretofore for more than twenty years "dead rabbits" had been assessed for duty at the rate of 10 per cent. as "non-enumerated unmanufactured articles," and "live rabbits" were assessed at 20 per cent.

The fact that bunny by getting himself converted into a "dead rabbit" could thereby get into this glorious country at half the price he could if he were alive has worried the Secretary of the Treasury a good deal, for he is a great protectionist and believes the industry of killing rabbits should be protected, so last week he issued instructions to all Collectors hereafter to assess "dead rabbits" at 2 cents per pound under Paragraph 274 of the Tariff act, by similitude. Paragraph 274 reads as follows: "Fresh beef, veal, mutton, and pork 2 cents per pound." The Secretary's reason for this change of classification of duty on "dead rabbits" is that in material, quality, texture, or the use to which they may be applied they are similar to fresh beef, veal, mutton, and pork. This new rate of duty must be higher than the rate that has prevailed for so long, for if it were lower he would have to get an opinion from the Attorney General recommending the change.

This does not look as though the Secretary of the Treasury was in sympathy with the President's prosecution of the Beef Trust, but the Secretary of the Treasury is a candidate for the Presidency, and who knows but that his "dead rabbit" ruling may help him with the Beef Trust and the great army of rabbit hunters. It is sincerely to be hoped he has a rabbit's foot, for no one was ever elected to the Presidency that did not carry a rabbit's foot in his pocket.

Chicago's Excuse.

THE PROPOSED PARK RAID.

Mr. Cutting Argues Against the Plan for a "Rotten Row."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me to make a protest against the proposal to construct a "Rotten Row" along the east side of Central Park. If there is anything in regard to which New Yorkers are tenacious it is the integrity of the great pleasure ground, and if there is anything in which they are united it is in opposition to any proposition tending to curtail its spaces or to devote any part of it to the further use of a special class. We need only recall the attempt to establish the Speedway (involving an arrangement on the west side very similar to that now proposed on the east side) to realize how a very strong political backing shrivels up in the fierce flame of public opinion, fanned immediately into a glow by the suggestion of encroachment upon, or even a change in, park spaces. Even the suggestion of a parade ground—with some meritorious features, and only an occasional use—raised an outcry that silenced the project at once.

It is this intense jealousy and keen sensitiveness that have preserved the Park through this half-century, and kept it the best of our municipal possessions, and one of the most beautiful public pleasure grounds in the world, a splendid monument to its promoter and its creator, Mr. Green and Mr. Olmsted.

Now, Sir, who, saving, perhaps, the few who live on Fifth Avenue fronting the Park, will be benefited by the proposed scheme? Certainly not the great mass of the frequenters of the Park, who will be deprived of just so much of space as is occupied by the "Row," and who, believe me, will protest with no uncertain sound against the change. The mere removal of the wall is an offense against good taste, which would, I know, have received the condemnation of the great architect of the Park, and of which I fancy it would be hard to find any celebrated landscape architect to approve.

The sentiment of the inclosing of the great Park, and of its formal isolation from the hubbub of the city, alone seem to some of us of more value than the improved (?) outlook from a few houses, or any other benefit claimed for the new plan. The public will want to hear the opinion of first-rate men as to the wisdom or beauty of the change—such, for example, as Prof. C. S. Sargent of the Arnold Arboretum or Messrs. Elliot, or Olmsted—men of mature judgment, long experience, and National reputation—before they will be persuaded to approve of a change in their Park. Why not fortify the position of the Municipal Commission with Prof. Sargent's indorsement?

But even if the scheme were defensible aesthetically, even if it should gain the approval of landscape architects of the highest rank, it should be condemned on the less logical, but more practical, theory that it is dangerous to permit any such change because of the introduction of a precedent; once begin to change the plan of the Park, devised by a man of real genius, and who knows where we may land? Once introduce the thin edge of the wedge and endless will be the blows on the broad end. Once weaken the public sentiment for the Park's integrity, and its great protection is gone.

Of course this is not addressed to such as consider the Park a "wilderness" and "no more picturesque than a cabbage patch." These one might expect to find favoring the new scheme. It is addressed to the real owners of the Park, the great mass of the "common" people, who love it (wisely) as it is, and who have, and I believe always will, stand like a bulwark against encroachment.

It is formally addressed to you, Mr. Editor, because THE TIMES has ever stood in the front rank of the Park protectors, and we may, therefore, confidently look to you again to oppose an absurd proposition, and, as on former occasions, score a success. W. BAYARD CUTTING.

STATE GOVERNMENT FLAWS.

How the Cabinet System Might Have Given Us Cheap Gas.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

You present a very dismal picture of the shortcomings of the Legislature—a picture which ought not to be idly contemplated. It ought to impel the voters to seek out the cause and its remedy. It seems to me that the failure of our State government is the result, largely, of a structural defect. The Legislature lacks responsibility. Who shall the citizen blame for the passage by the Senate of the Niagara grab? Who shall we blame for the failure of the 80-cent gas bill? The Republicans are in majority, but the first measure was passed and the second killed by the votes of both Republicans and Democrats.

Party government, in this case, is manifestly a failure, for its fundamental principle, that the elector shall have the choice of two men divided on important public measures, is violated. Mr. Higgins is said to have opposed the Niagara grab and favored 80-cent gas. Mr. Murphy, perhaps, thinks the other way. Let us suppose that Mr. Higgins had a seat in the Senate and was called Prime Minister instead of Governor. Let us suppose that Mr. Murphy was the leader of the opposition instead of the leader of Tammany Hall. The gas bills would have been introduced by Premier Higgins as government measures, and would have had a safe voyage through the house. If one had been defeated he would have dissolved the Legislature, appealed to the country, and undoubtedly would have been triumphantly returned.

The prospect of such quick and sure triumph of the popular will would deter the legislators from opposing good measures; it would prevent the formation of bi-party combinations to pass bad ones. Under the cabinet system the Niagara grab would never have reached its second reading. Under the cabinet system we should have a responsibility, a sensitiveness to public opinion, which under the present system is impossible. A. J. L.

From The Kansas City Journal.

A local merchant asked a Salina editor to roast the city administration for letting an itinerant peddler come in there and undersell him on goods. This is what the editor wrote: "City dads, you will hereby take notice that you are roasted for permitting peddlers to sell goods here. The merchant for whom we do this favor has his job printing done in Chicago.

A PATTERSON JUROR'S VIEWS.

Thinks the Case Ought Never to Have Come to Trial.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial of May 5 in reference to the Patterson case impressed me very much, and I consider it a timely article on an important matter, and it is commendable in your paper publishing its views in so prominent and forcible a manner. I have had it in my mind to write my opinion on this case for some time, but have deferred, thinking that there might be some impropriety in my so doing, but in the light of subsequent events a few lines from a juror may not be out of place, and may perhaps deter the District Attorney's office from carrying things too far in its desire to advance some of its Assistant Attorneys to secure fame at the expense of that unfortunate part of our population which is accused of crime.

I was a juror in the second trial of Miss Patterson, which unfortunately resulted in a disagreement. I have served as a juror in this city many times, but never saw a more flimsy case made up than this one. Right from the start it was apparent to me that no conviction could be had after Mr. Rand had presented his case, and I will say now that his long-drawn-out oratorical address made no impression on me whatever, but I am satisfied it did impress some of the jurors after we went into the jury room for deliberation, and to my mind was the chief cause of the disagreement. It created a false impression on their minds, and tended to confuse them, and they forgot the serious nature of the case before them and actually believed the impressions and opinions of Mr. Rand as absolute facts. This should not be permitted by the Judge. He should control the prosecuting attorney in the same manner as witnesses and compel him to keep to facts and also not allow him to abuse an unfortunate person in such a shameful manner as was done to Miss Patterson, for until she was proved guilty she was to be held as innocent of any crime as the best citizen who walks the streets of this city.

Do you think that if she had been found guilty the court would have allowed him to abuse her so? Then, why allow it when she was innocent in the eye of the law? It made a very bad impression on me. I want proved facts backed up by impartial witnesses, and can conscientiously say I have always made this the first consideration of my mind while acting as a juror, nor would I allow the previous life of a defendant to affect me.

Mr. Rand's witnesses were interested. To the expert witnesses I attached little or no weight. The case should never have been presented to a trial jury. The Grand Jury should not have indicted the woman on the evidence at hand, and the District Attorney should never have presented the case with the insufficient evidence in his possession. Look at the expense to the county and the hardship to the jury—sixteen days away from business and a whole night spent in a cheerless jury room lying on the floor. It makes me indignant when I think of it, and Mr. Rand is so tired out he has to take a week off to rest. What about the jurors? Is there no consideration for them? From my personal observation these many years the courts have stood still while everything else has advanced. They are about three hundred years behind the times. This case and others remind me of cases I have read about during the reign of Queen Anne of England, when all sorts of things were done to land people in jail.

It is a grand and fortunate thing for the people that they have the newspapers to present to them and hold up for their inspection all abuses and to get expressions of public opinion, which is conceded to be the unwritten law of the land.

FOR BOWLING GREEN.

One Who Thinks Its Destruction Would Be Treasonable.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Referring to a recent letter which appeared in your columns advocating the destruction of Bowling Green, I am very pleased to notice that this uncalled-for and treasonable desecration of a historic spot which will ever be held sacred to the hearts of all true and patriotic Americans has met with a few point-blank reminders that such treason would not for a moment be tolerated.

It is somewhat deplorable, however, to know that among us we have a man who could be heartless enough to think such a thing possible, far more to suggest it. No American or any one who has a knowledge of America and her glorious history could write such an article, and it is consoling to know that the article emanated from the mind of an Englishman with strong anarchistic tendencies. It would have been better judgment, I think, for the various writers who replied had they treated the matter with the contempt which it so well deserves.

A PATRIOT.

A BOY'S VACATION TIME.

Hail, that long awaited day
When, the school books laid away,
All the thoughts of merry youngsters turn from pages back to play!
Done with lesson and with rule,
Done with teacher and with school,
Stray the vagrant hearts of childhood to the tempting wood and pool!

Who will tell in rune and rhyme
Of the glory and the grime
In the dusty lanes and byways of a boy's vacation time?
Hark, the whistle and the cry
That is piping shrill and high
From the chorus of glad youngsters trooping riotously by!

Say, did sun e'er brightly shine
As when, with his rod and line
Tramps the barefoot lad a-fishing, and the water clear and fine!
Sweet the murmur of the trees,
And what glory now he sees
In the chatter of the wild birds and the buzz of humble bees!

Hear the green woods cry and call,
Through the Summer to the Fall,
"We are waiting, waiting, waiting, with a welcome for you all!"
Hear the lads take up the cry,
With an echo, shrill and high:
"We are coming, coming, coming, for vacation time is nigh!"

How the skies are blue and fair,
How the clover scents the air
With a witchery of fragrance that is delicate and rare!
How the blossoms bud and blow,
And the great waves flood and flow
In the ocean of boy-happiness, like billows, to and fro!

Ah, my heart goes back and sighs
When the piping calls and cries
From the hearts of merry youngsters like a song of triumph rise!
And I would that rune and rhyme
Might be splendid and sublime

PERILS OF RATE FIXING.

Danger of Asking Commerce Commission to Do What It Can't.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a communication published in your issue of Dec. 8, 1904, the writer called attention to the fact that the President, in his message to Congress, contradicted himself when he said:

> While I am of the opinion that at present it would be undesirable, if it were not impracticable, finally to clothe the commission with general authority to fix railroad rates, and then goes on and recommends the very measures which would give that general authority.

When the President wrote his message he had evidently been misled as to the effect of the proposed legislation. But since then, and during the investigations of the House and Senate Committees on Inter-State Commerce, an immense amount of information has come to light; and it has been shown conclusively that the power to revise and fix rates to go into effect at once is equivalent to "clothing the commission with general authority to fix railroad rates."

Ignorance of so important a subject seems to be no longer pardonable. Yet the President, in his speech to the Denver Chamber of Commerce, advocated the policy of extending the powers of the Inter-State Commerce Commission and of giving it particularly the power to fix rates; and to have the rates it fixes go into effect practically at once. And while he seems to be aware of the great harm that might result from such legislation, he urges upon the public and the parties interested in railroads the absolute need of acquiescence in such a law. He is reinforced by our distinguished Secretary of War, an able jurist, who admonishes the railroad men, as others have done before him, to aid and not hinder such legislation, lest greater evils befall them.

It is not easy to conceive what greater calamity can befall the country than by requiring the commission to do what is not within the scope of its physical or mental powers; that is, to fix rates for all the railroads in this country. The effect of such an experiment has been aptly described by Mr. David Willcox as "business by lawsuit." As to the owners of railroads, could Congress inflict a greater injury upon them than to deprive them of the use and control of their property, which must be the effect of the proposed legislation?

To those familiar with the subject of railway transportation it seems strange that such drastic legislation should be proposed to cure evils that are partly imaginary, and partly the result of existing laws which, being based on unrestrained competition, tend to create and foster the very evils they are designed to cure; that is, unjust discriminations.

There can be no doubt that the fixing of rates by a commission would be a great blow to the prosperity of this country; and it is safe to say that if such legislation should be enacted, the business communities which now advocate it would be the first to denounce the rate-making commission, as well as the law.

A DEMOCRAT WHO REGRETS HAVING VOTED FOR ROOSEVELT.

New York, May 10, 1905.

HAVE TO BREAK LAW, HE SAYS.

President Ramsey of Wabash Testifies at Rate Hearing.

WASHINGTON, May 10.—"We are forced to violate the law. We must talk over through rates with traffic managers of connecting and competing lines," said Joseph Ramsey, Jr., President of the Wabash Railroad, testifying to-day before the Senate Committee on Inter-State Commerce. Mr. Ramsey said the Wabash was a stockholder in the American Refrigerator Transit Company, but that no preference was given on the Gould lines to this company.

Steamships, both coastwise and river lines, he believed, should be subject to the inter-State commerce laws. He doubted whether any of the great money interests in New York exercised control of rates.

To give to a commission rate-making power, he said, over traffic of 225,000 miles of railroad, earning $2,000,000,000 a year, and vested interests amounting to $13,000,000,000, upon which properties depend employing directly over 1,500,000 citizens, and supporting some 15,000,000 persons, would be an experiment dangerous alike to the public, the railroads, and the future development of the country. Any single body, he contended, could not make rates for the entire country. He added:

> "No commission can have the nerve or legal right to make as low rates as are frequently made by railroads to defend what they consider their rights in one territory or community, or to enable the large surplus crop to be exported, or to build up new territory on its lines."

Chairman Elkins to-day summoned by telegraph the Presidents of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company, the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, the United States Steel Corporation, the Fairmont Coal Company, and the Pittsburg Coal Company.

Trees as Elevators.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your "Can Trees Act as 'Elevators?'" discussion, might not the elevation of the cannon, described by "M." be explained as being due merely to the growth of the tree's branches in diameter? I remember as a youngster back on the farm we had a gate hung to the trunk of a maple tree. In a few years I saw that gate "elevated" a couple of feet. Naturally, I thought it was due to the upward growth of the tree, but in reasoning about it later I saw readily enough that it was the sudden growth of the tree trunk at its base that caused the lifting of the gate at its other end, thus making the phenomenon a very deceiving one to the casual observer.

OUR CONSULS IGNORANT, SAYS BISHOP POTTER

Got Information from Standard Oil and Tobacco Agents.

SUGGESTS A MERIT SYSTEM

Civil Service Reform Association Has Asked State Board to Investigate City Departments.

At the banquet of the Civil Service Reform Association following the annual meeting of that body in the Hotel Astor, last night, Bishop Potter criticised the Consular Service of the United States. He declared that it should be placed under the regulations of the merit system, and in support of his views told experiences which befell him on his trip around the world. The attack by the Bishop followed the address of Henry F. Greene, member of the National Civil Service Commission, who reported that the last six months had been the most satisfactory in every way since the establishment of the service in 1883.

The meeting preceding the banquet was brief. The President of the association, Carl Schurz, was re-elected, as were Secretary Goodwin, Treasurer Frissell, and Chairman Miller of the Executive Committee. Col. S. W. Burt was chosen to succeed the late James C. Carter as one of the Vice Presidents, the other Vice Presidents being re-elected. The Executive Committee made its annual report, and adjournment was at once had to the banquet hall.

President Schurz was toastmaster. The members present were, in many instances, accompanied by their wives or daughters.

Civil Service Commissioner Greene recalled the service of olden days and the difficulty the commissioners had to contend with, contrasting it happily with the comparatively easy time they now enjoy.

"The Fifty-eighth Congress," said he, "made not the slightest attempt to curtail the powers of the commission, and freely gave the necessary appropriations for carrying on our work. There are now but two classes of governmental employes who, according to my ideas, should come within the scope of the service who are still outside—the internal revenue force and the 8,000 fourth-class postmasters who receive salaries of more than $300 a year. To these two classes might possibly be added the pension examiners."

Mr. Greene recited the steps taken by the service recently. It had been extended, he said, to the Isthmian Canal force.

"The law is now iron-clad," he said. "There is no possibility of evading it, and in eight or ten years every employe of the Government will be under the classified service."

Bishop Potter, who had come in late, was the next speaker.

"There are two elements in the civil service reform movement," said the Bishop—"the active workers, members of the association, and the great mass of people who believe in it, although taking no active part in its advancement. I was both surprised and gratified when Mr. Greene told us of the progress that the service was making. I had feared that the circle of those who were supporting the merit system was steadily contracting instead of expanding.

"There is another direction in which the Government might apply civil service with much benefit. I believe that it should extend to all positions in the Diplomatic and Consular service. If you will, as I did several years ago, take a trip around the world, you will agree with me. In many cities, especially in the Far East, the person whom I found to be best informed and to whom ultimately I was forced to turn was usually the representative of the American Tobacco Company, the Standard Oil Company, or some other enterprise of a commercial character.

"The Consuls were ignorant and were absolutely unfit for such positions as they held. There was one man in particular who represented the United States in one of the six or seven greatest cities of the world who was such a shock to me that I asked myself the question, 'How on earth could he ever have been named?' After my return to America I asked a brother Bishop from the section of the country from which the particular Consul came for an explanation.

"'Well,' the Bishop replied, 'he was inconvenient in our politics.'"

The last speaker, R. C. E. Brown of the New York State Civil Service Commission, told of conditions as he saw them. He said the great trouble was the immobility of the service. This difficulty was now being overcome.

The annual report of the Executive Committee dealt with the history of the service—Federal, State, and municipal—for the last twelve months. The general tone of the report was hopeful.

The State Commission has increased the respect for the civil service law, according to the committee, and Mayor McClellan's action in removing "an inefficient commission" has been publicly commended by the association. The opinion was expressed, however, that the new commission had failed to grasp the situation, and rules were now being evaded by the heads of some departments to such an extent that the committee had asked the State Commission to extend its investigations to New York City.

INVESTED $80,000 IN OPERA.

Hermann Spent Besides in Six Months $40,000 or $50,000.

George Hermann, a lumberman, whose wife, Florence Crosby Hermann, is suing him for separation, went on the witness stand at the trial of the suit in the Supreme Court yesterday and said that he spent $80,000 as "angel" for "The Isle of Champagne" comic opera company. This was in 1897 and 1898, he said. He incidentally mentioned that while living in the Gerlach Apartment House he spent $40,000 or $50,000.

"How?" asked counsel.

"I lived there. I had rooms there," answered Hermann.

"How long did you live there?"

"Six months."

"And spent between $40,000 and $50,000 in six months?"

"Yes, in decorating the rooms and living expensively."

He added that he had inherited about $300,000 from his father's estate, but had spent it. Then he depended on what money his stepmother gave him. He said she lent him $18,000 on one occasion, and much more after that, but he wasn't sure whether it was $50,000 or $100,000. Since he resigned as Treasurer of the Hermann Lumber Company, he said, his stepmother allowed him about $250 a month.

To-day counsel will sum up.

DIRECTORS' PLANS SPOILED.

Sag Harbor Cashier Was to be Let Off —District Attorney Steps In.

RIVERHEAD, L. I., May 10.—Cashier Francis H. Palmer of the Peconic Bank of Sag Harbor was arrested there this afternoon by Deputy Sheriff Higgins. The warrant was issued by Justice George W. Hildreth after an inquisition at which District Attorney Livingston Smith, John H. Hildreth, President of the Peconic Bank; the Rev. John J. Harrison, William E. Dennison, and Cleveland F. Stillwell, Directors of the concern, were present. Palmer's shortage of $41,600 recently caused the bank to suspend operations for a week, but it reopened its doors on Monday.

All the witnesses were unwilling to volunteer information. The Rev. Mr. Harrison, one of the Directors, in discussing the matter, said afterward:

"Sag Harbor is almost the original in the belief that the Republican Justice can be beat met by Lenthal [illegible] with Mr. Palmer. This is the first charge [illegible] Justice Hildreth, and we will [illegible] the case."

FIVE BITTEN BY DOG.

Animal Charges Into Crowd of Brooklyn School Children.

Five persons, four of them school children and the fifth a mother trying to save her child, were bitten by a dog, supposed to be rabid, at Watkins Street and Sutter Avenue, East New York, yesterday afternoon, a few minutes after Public School 66 had been dismissed. There was a panic in the neighborhood for nearly fifteen miuutes before the animal was cornered by Policeman Allisberg and shot. Those bitten are:

TENSECK, ETTA, 5 years old, of 209 Osborne Street.

RADEMAN, MAX, 12 years old, of 206 Osborne Street.

HONIG, SADIE, 3 years old, of 207 Osborne Street.

SANWICH, ZUSKI, 4 years old, of 224 Osborne Street.

HOUFT, Mrs. ANNA, of 131 Osborne Street.

The children were surging out of the school building when they were attracted by a dog fight not far down the street. One dog, a mongrel, seemed to be attacking another, which was making efforts to escape. The children ran to see the fight, when suddenly the mongrel caught sight of them, and, with its tongue hanging out and yelping in a frenzied manner, rushed right into them and buried its teeth in the leg of Etta Teneseck.

The child's father, Hermann, happened to see the incident and rushed to save his child. When he attempted to carry her to a place of safety the animal bit into his trousers, tearing them.

Mrs. Houft was the second person bitten. She had rushed in to catch up her little girl. She succeeded in getting her out of harm's way, but was bitten herself while doing do. The dog then turned and pursued the terrified mob of children through Watkins Street to Sutter Avenue, then into Osborne Street. It had bitten three children on the same way.

Policeman Allisberg then came on the scene and fired a hasty shot at the dog. The animal was not hit, but scared at the report of the pistol turned tail and fled back to Watkins Street, where Allisberg flung his club and stunned it, after which he fired two shots, killing the dog.

SAW LOST DRESS PASS BY.

Tailor's Wife Rushed Out and Wearer Is Arrested.

Harris Goldberg and his wife were in their tailor shop at 142 West Thirty-sixth Street last night at 8 o'clock working on several suits for women and wondering if they would ever find out who stole three suits that were taken from the shop on the night of Jan. 8. They mourned one suit especially, a brown one which was almost ready for the customer, who was to pay $65 for it.

"There it is, Harris, the brown one!" suddenly cried Mrs. Goldberg as she ran out of the door and laid a heavy hand on the shoulder of a blonde young woman who at the Tenderloin Station said she was Mrs. Ilies McKenzie, twenty-six years old, of the Aulic Hotel, at 156 West Thirty-sixth Street.

Mrs. McKenzie said she had bought the dress from a woman whom she had known only a few days. She was locked up.

RUSSIAN PLAYERS IN TRAGEDY

St. Petersburg Company in Tolstoy's Undramatic Work.

It is to be regretted that for its first extended engagement uptown the St. Petersburg Dramatic Company has selected Count Alexis Tolstoy's "Tzar Feodor Ivanovitch," a work which, whatever its value as a historic document, has practically no dramatic interest, and provides almost no opportunity for the remarkable histrionic display of which the chief members of this company are capable.

The tragedy forms the second part of a trilogy and embraces the period of the reign of the last member of the Rurik dynasty, the sickly and irresolute Czar Feodor, the second son of Ivan the Terrible. The chief interest of his reign centres in the struggle of the reactionary party against the increasing influence of the Czar's first Minister, Godunov, who has laid plans for radical internal reforms in order to bring Russia into closer relations with Western Europe. The conservative party is composed chiefly of nobles who until recently have enjoyed virtual independence. Their leader, Prince Shusky, is very popular with the inhabitants of Moscow. Between the two parties stands the Czar, an irresolute, vacillating monarch, giving his confidence now to the one, now to the other, of the contending factions. The sickly and degenerate Feodor is conscious of his incapacity to rule the empire, and allows the latter Senators to use him for their own ends until the struggle is decided in favor of Godunov, who causes Shusky to be strangled to death. Then Czar Feodor, crushed in spirit, accepts the advice of Czarina Irina, and appoints her brother Godunov regent of the empire.

As a play to be acted in the theatre the "Tzar Feodor Ivanovitch," the second part of the trilogy, is, if anything, less satisfying than was "Ivan the Terrible," which created interest, however, as a medium for the display of one of Mr. Mansfield's highly diversified studies in character. But unlike Ivan, who was a positive figure, commanding and dominating, and in that sense dramatic, the Tzar Feodor is altogether negative, a weakling, who seldom moves save at the bidding of some one stronger than himself, and who lacks the initiative in every plan and every intrigue which is supposed to engage his attention.

Paul N. Orlonoff's study of this invertebrate individual is, as might have been expected from his previous achievement in "The Chosen People," a thoughtful, and, we doubt not, a faithful one. But the figure ceases to be of commanding interest long before the five acts and nine long scenes are over.

Mme. Nasinoff, too, suffers from lack of opportunity. The Russian Duse—for the description is an apt one—is on the stage much of the time, and her remarkable beauty is good to look upon. But for the greater part of the evening she has nothing to do—not the least difficult task for the player, but a most tantalizing one for those of us who recall the actress's tremendous emotional capacity and are anxious for further exhibitions of her skill. If Mme. Nasinoff could be induced to master English what an acquisition she might be to the American theatre! But that is almost too much to hope for.

LIFTS BAN ON MARKSMAN.

Bullet-Disrobing Act at Hippodrome Resumed on McAdoo's Order.

Col. Gaston Bordeverry, the marksman, last night resumed his act of shooting off his wife's clothing at the Hippodrome. The police stopped him last week because of a report that a bullet had grazed the woman's cheek. This was found to be without foundation, and last night official permission was given to continue the act.

On Saturday Col. Bordeverry gave an exhibition at the Police Traffic Squad dinner at the Waldorf, and yesterday afternoon he called on Commissioner McAdoo. On being asked if the act might be continued, Commissioner McAdoo said: "Why, I didn't give anything to do with stopping the act. I gave no such orders. You can go on with my permission to-night."

The Chief Inspector, who read the report of the alleged accident in the papers, ordered the discontinuance of the act.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

CASSINI GOES TO SPAIN; ROSEN TO SUCCEED HIM

War Views of Czar's Washington Ambassador the Cause.

SUCCESSOR'S PEACE ATTITUDE

Baron Rosen Was Russia's Representative at Tokio Before the War Began—Change in June.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 10.—Count Cassini, the Russian Ambassador to this country, is to be transferred to Madrid. He will be succeeded here by Baron Rosen, until recently Ruslan Minister to Japan. Count Cassini will sail in June, upon the arrival of Baron Rosen, going to Contrexeville for his health. He will take his new post next Fall.

The fact that the change in the Russian Ambassadorship became known here before being officially announced in St. Petersburg was somewhat annoying to Count Cassini, and the news was to-day the leading topic of conversation among the members of the Diplomatic Corps.

Count Cassini is the Dean in the corps, and has been here since June, 1898, coming from Peking, where his adjustment of the results of the war between Japan and China had given him distinct prestige as a diplomat. On the recall of Dr. Von Holleben, the German Ambassador, three years ago, the Russian Ambassador passed to the head of the line, where his courtly manner and genial disposition have commanded for him the good-will and respect of all.

The transfer is taken to mean that Count Cassini's usefulness in Washington has passed and that an Ambassador whose war utterances are less pronounced would be better fitted to deal with the questions that may arise here in connection with the war in the East. Count Cassini is an unequivocal advocate of war to the end, and he has always urged that Russia could not afford to consider peace until her prestige had been established by a series of great successes and the ultimate conquest of Japan as an invader of Manchuria.

Count Cassini's war attitude has not had a conciliating effect on the American press, neither has it tended to create sentiment for Russia in the struggle with Japan. This has not been gratifying to his Government. A patrician, Cassini has no sympathy with the masses. He is of Italian blood, but was born a Russian subject and wears a title conferred by the Czar.

The fact that he goes to Madrid, where he will have little to do with the events of the greatest importance to his country, is taken to mean that his Government has decided to make a radical change in the character of its representation in Washington. Baron Rosen is said to favor a more conservative war policy and to be in affiliation with those who urge peace.

McKINLEY MEMORIAL DESIGN.

To Be Like Grant Tomb—Fairbanks and Cortelyou at Meeting.

The design of H. Van Buren Magonigle for the proposed mausoleum to be erected as a memorial to President McKinley was approved yesterday by the Trustees of the McKinley National Memorial Association, who met in the Fine Arts Building in West Fifty-seventh Street.

The mausoleum designed by Mr. Magonigle will resemble the tomb of Gen. Grant. It is proposed that the main feature shall be a dome seventy-five feet in diameter and one hundred feet high. It will be built of granite, with an interior finished in white marble. The entire cost of the mausoleum and the improvement of the surrounding grounds will be about $500,000.

The association has purchased, upon which to erect the mausoleum, a tract of land adjoining the Westlawn Cemetery at Canton, where the President was buried. The tract will be known as Monument Hill. There is an approach to it called "The Mall," which will be beautified at an expense of $50,000. It is proposed that a waterway be constructed along the middle of this avenue, which will end in a broad flight of stairs beginning at the base of Monument Hill and leading up to the base of the tomb.

A detailed description of the monument will not be made public until the copyright of the plans and pictures has been obtained, when copies will be placed on sale for the benefit of the memorial fund.

A Building Committee was appointed last night by President Day. Among those who will serve on it are Gov. Franklin Murphy of New Jersey, William A. Lynch of Canton, William McConway of Pittsburg, Alexander H. Revell of Chicago, and Cornelius N. Bliss and E. W. Bloomingdale of this city.

Others who were present at the meeting last night were Vice President Fairbanks, Postmaster General Cortelyou, Gen. J. M. Duffield of Detroit, Col. J. M. Lowry of Atlanta, and Thomas Dolan of Philadelphia. Charles G. Dawes of Chicago and Judge Horace Lurton of Nashville were agreed upon to fill the vacancies on the board caused by the death of Postmaster General Payne and Judge Hammond. The names of the proposed new members will be submitted to President Roosevelt for approval.

WATERBURY WEDDING PLANS.

Bishop Potter to Officiate at Morris-Waterbury Marriage on May 22.

Special to The New York Times.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., May 10.—Invitations are out for the wedding of Gouverneur Morris, the author, to Miss Elsie Waterbury, at St. Peter's Protestant Episcopal Church at Westchester, on Monday, May 22. Bishop Potter is to officiate, and will be assisted by the resident rector of the church, the Rev. Dr. F. M. Clendennin. About 600 invitations have been issued.

Mr. Morris is a descendant of Lewis Morris, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and is a member of the Westchester Country Club and the Knickerbocker Club. Miss Waterbury is the daughter of J. M. Waterbury. She is devoted to outdoor sports, and is particularly fond of cross-country riding.

MISS WHITNEY TEFFT'S HEIR.

Wins in the Contest of Dry Goods Man's Will.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., May 10.—By the allowance to-day of the will of Frank G. Tefft, late of New York, Miss Helen M. Whitney of Boston becomes legatee to all of Mr. Tefft's property except $1,000, which he bequeathed to his only son, Erastus T. Tefft of New York, who was the remonstrant against the allowance of the will.

Dr. Edward W. Peet of New York and other physicians testified that according to their opinion Mr. Tefft's mind had been affected by Bright's disease, of which he died. Testimony was introduced to show that Mr. Tefft loaned money indiscriminately.

Miss Whitney testified that she first met Mr. Tefft in 1893, and that they became engaged to be married in 1897. They were not married, she said, because Mr. Tefft's finances were in a tangle. No announcement of the engagement was made, though her family knew of it. The court held that Mr. Tefft had made the will with a clear mind and in good faith.

LUMBER JACKS AT WORK.

Sketches in Oil of Scenes About the Coytesville Mills.

Two dozen paintings of medium size equip without crowding the New Gallery, 15 West Thirtieth Street, and present the sketches of out-door work and play by Mr. Clarence Blodgett. They will be shown until May 13 inclusive.

Most of the canvases are rapid transcripts of labor about the lumber mills at Coytesville, so that we have a report of the various stages between the standing tree and the board as it falls aside from the nimble buzz saw. Two men and a cross-saw are at work felling a live tree at an awkward angle not far above the root. Other two are axemen tackling a bole with a dead heart and the hollow has been exposed by clean broad strokes. "The Sawyer" is painted so dark that one has to use one's imagination. "Rolling the Log" is a vigorous scene of human force applied to inert matter and in "Woodsmen" the lumber jacks are taking advantage of a hill to precipitate a fallen trunk down a declivity in the forest. A long train of horses and sleds are seen from behind in "Getting out the Log," while "The Broadaxe" shows how they reduce the weight of a section by squaring of the round of the trunk. Other proceedings are caught on the fly in "Woodmill," where a buzz saw is eating its way down the side of a prostrate giant of the forest. "Stoking," under the mill itself, "Shovelling Sawdust," a rapid impression made with the broadest of brushes and "At the Stone Crusher," three men, a cart and a white horse.

Almost all these pictures are like memoranda by a man who feels that he can put color, air and ordinary details into the pictures he intends to make some day with these to guide him. What concerns him is the movement of figures—everything else can be supplied by memory. We have one such broadly brushed-in memorandum from the Hudson—"Men Digging a Road," and another called "The Hayfield," in which the many figures are merely jotted down.

Some artists use charcoal for these useful data, but Mr. Blodgett prefers canvas and oils. Seeing which, we vaguely wonder why, since he was about it and must have carried a number of colors, he should not have tried to suggest daylight and out-of-doorsiness and the ordinary indications of the seasons. Why dash a mass of muddy white into woods beyond some woodmen and call it "A Flurry of Snow," when there is no sign of snow in the air, and what lies on the ground needs a label to distinguish it? The fantastically bent legs of the boys on a pond in "Hockey Players," and the wabbly legs of the teamsters in "Getting Out the Log" are capital hints for the artist to remember; but then we do not exactly understand why he should show these intimate and most useful jottings, seeing that he has forgot to paint from any of them a picture. When an artist has become famous it is interesting to see the original thumbnail data he has used; but here we have things the other way round—dull, messy, drab and gray sketches such as any artist can paint by the yard, even though he were color-blind—and the public called in to admire. Is not this a bit preposterous?

ACADEMY ADOPTS PLAN FOR FINE ARTS CLUB

Accepts Columbia Site and Wants Money for Building.

FIRE INTERRUPTS MEETING

Smoke from Kitchen Where Dinner Was Being Prepared for Academicians Causes Alarm.

The National Academy of Design, which held its annual meeting at 215 West Fifty-seventh Street yesterday afternoon, and discussed plans for the new School of Arts intended to rival the Beaux Arts in Paris, had a lot of excitement it didn't expect. There was an alarm of fire from the Osborne apartment house near by, and pretty soon the discussion in the meeting was drowned out by the clang of the bells of the fire apparatus. Remembering the fire that wrecked the National Academy of Design Building, at One Hundred and Ninth Street and Amsterdam Avenue, the members felt nervous until they had found out for themselves that the blaze didn't amount to much.

The cause of the alarm, it was discovered later, was smoke coming from a chimney seldom used. A new fire had been lighted yesterday to assist in the service of the dinner to which the members sat down at the close of the meeting.

The result of the Academy's discussion of the proposed new school was a resolution moved by Mr. Blashfield and passed, authorizing the council to perfect and carry out the plan of co-operation between the Academy and Columbia University in the founding of a School of Fine Arts, an academic institution which it is proposed to make the best of its kind in the country, if not in the world.

This had already been recommended by the Council of the Academy in response to a letter from President Butler of Columbia and on lines shown in an agreement drawn up. By it Columbia will give the Academy the free use of a 200-foot square plot of ground at Broadway and One Hundred and Sixteenth Street as soon as the Academy has raised $500,000 for the erection of a school building. In this building will be united the schools of the academy with the Columbia Schools of Architecture and Music, the Presidents of the two institutions with the professors of the school to form a faculty of fine arts.

About forty members of the Academy were present at the meeting and three-fourths voted in favor of the resolution. The disaffected members argued that the Academy would lose its identity in taking the step and others thought that too favorable terms were given to Columbia.

Now that final action has been taken H. W. Watrous, Corresponding Secretary of the Academy, said yesterday: "It remains for the public spirit of American citizens to see that the money is provided to begin this great work."

It will be some years before the building can be completed. In the meantime the Academy schools which have been meeting in the University buildings since the fire which destroyed the structure at One Hundred and Ninth Street and Amsterdam Avenue, will remain under the direction of the Academy, as heretofore, and go back to the old building as soon as it is restored in the Fall.

The officers elected yesterday were as follows: President—Frederick Dielman, re-elected. Vice President — Herbert Adams. C. Y. Turner, the former Vice President, refusing another term; Corresponding Secretary—H. W. Watrous; Recording Secretary—Will H. Low; Treasurer—Lockwood de Forest. The new members of the Council are J. C. Nicoll, Ben Foster, H. Bolton Jones, Kenyon Cox, John W. Alexander, and F. D. Millet.

The following Associates were made full Academicians: William T. Smedley, Frank W. Benson, Charles Grafley, sculptor, of Philadelphia, and William Sergeant Kendall.

The new Associates are Howard Pyle, the illustrator; Charles F. McKim, the first architect to become an Associate for many years; Frank Duveneck, painter, of Cincinnati; Frederick Crowninshield, Maxfield Parrish, the illustrator; Edward C. Potter, sculptor; Hermon A. MacNeil, Henry Wolf, the first wood engraver to be elected for many years, and Walter Nettleton, painter.

The Hanging Committee elected included William H. Howe and Louis Loeb, Academicians, and Walter Shirlaw, Associate.

It was announced yesterday that the eighty-first annual exhibition of the National Academy of Design will be opened Dec. 22 and pictures will be received Dec. 4 and 5. The exhibition will close Jan. 28, 1906, a week earlier than usual, all exhibitions having been moved up one week to make room for the American Water Color Club exhibit.

Harper's Book News

The Accomplice

The story of a hotly-contested murder trial, by Frederick Trevor Hill. It is the work of a well-known author of mystery along entirely new lines in fiction. The narrative is told in the words of the foreman of the jury, who chances upon outside evidence during the trial which greatly complicates the situation and eventually precipitates a tremendous climax. The book is a maze of mystery to the very end, and is not without a pretty love tale in its lighter moments.

The Vicissitudes of Evangeline

A twin-sister volume to The Visits of Elizabeth by Elinor Glyn, and according to the Boston Herald "one of the bright, lively volumes of the season."

The Chicago Record-Herald says: "The book is undeniably clever, alluring with its lively dash, vivid tinting, and half-humorous philosophy. The reader will know no dull moment from cover to cover, nor does it lack for truly tender touches."

Sanna

The island of Nantucket forms an ideal background for romance. Miss Waller, author of The Wood-carver of 'Lympus, has employed this charming setting for her new tale. Every one will agree that Sanna is altogether bewitching in her girlish coquetry and charm.

THE OUTSIDE SECURITIES

Active Trading Limited to a Very Few Issues.

More Talk of Dividend on United Copper Common—Inside Buying of Northern Securities.

Only two stocks did anything in yesterday's market for outside securities to relieve it of utter monotony, Northern Securities and United Copper. Both were active and strong, giving the market a better appearance than it had had for some days. In the rest of the list the trading was very limited, and the movement of prices unimportant.

UNITED COPPER rose from 23 to 25 and closed at 24⅝. The preferred sold up to 73, the high price of Tuesday. Reports were current of a renewal of efforts to bring about a settlement of the struggle between the United Copper interests and the Amalgamated Copper Company, but representatives of the former stated that they had nothing to say on the subject, although intimating that the general situation was satisfactory to them. The Montana Ore Purchasing Company, a subsidiary company of the United Copper Company, yesterday declared its regular semi-annual dividend of $2 per share and an extra dividend of $2 a share. This will yield about $317,000 to the United Copper Company, and it was said yesterday that the extra dividend on the Montana Ore Purchasing stock was for the purpose of paving the way for a dividend on United Copper common.

NORTHERN SECURITIES dropped a point or more in the early trading, but later advanced sharply from about 161 to 165. The upturn in the stock was caused principally by the purchase of about 5,000 shares by a house that frequently executes orders for the Hill interests. It seems likely that purchases of the stock by these interests would hasten the conversion of the stock and serve to still further reduce the amount of Northern Securities stock available for operations in the market.

POPE MANUFACTURING.—A sale of 100 shares of Pope Manufacturing second preferred was made on Tuesday at 22½ and not reported on that day. The stock sold yesterday at 21½.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Irregular; Call Money Easy, 2@3 Per Cent.

Dull Trading and Small Price Changes Under Influence of Conflicting Factors of Minor Importance.

There was no commanding news during Exchange hours yesterday, and business proceeded under the influence of intelligence of considerable effect in the aggregate, but of a nature to leave small balance of supporting over depressing factors. There could be no doubt of the general estimation of the President's remarks affirming survival of his rate-making views. Stocks were openly and effectively sold for this reason, but the market was supported by anticipation of the crop report, which was unknown until the day's business was done. The war situation was thought less critical, but London persisted in depression which it attributed to worry about the account in "Americans." The specifications illogically asserted that the embarrassed London operator had a six-hundred-thousand-dollar account in Mexican rails, and added that the settlement was viewed anxiously for disclosures of other troubles. Our market struggled against this pretty successfully, industrials in particular responding to manipulation. Smelters and Lead advanced as though there was some especial virtue in publication of familiar plans upon which prices had already been taken so high that the boom had tumbled of its own weight. Northern Pacific and Northern Securities were strong, to the accompaniment of traffic reports which were more convincing than the putting up of Colorado Fuel while Steel Trust was falling. The start to sell the steel shares was made in London, but additional impetus here was given by the publication toward the end of the fact that for the first time in nine months stocks of iron were larger, production having at last overtaken consumption. The accumulation of 17,000 tons is inconsiderable in comparison with a growth of millions of tons in both production and consumption. It will serve a useful purpose if it keeps down prices to a level where the use of the metal will not be checked in the manner which has aborted so many iron booms.

The publication of the crop report gave no explanation of the selling of the Grangers. The Winter-killed acreage is larger than expected, but is only one-third of last year's loss, and is smaller than for any year since 1900, except 1903. On the other hand the condition, which was left at the last report about equal to the average of the three best crops in the last five years, and which had been expected to decline to 91, advanced to 92.5, compared with 76.5 last year, and 86 as a five-year average. This corresponds to the exceptional yield of 15.5 bushels per acre, and a crop larger than for a decade, say 460,000,000 bushels—enough to encourage those who think crop prospects a better reliance than merger stories. The addition of 100,000,000 bushels more or less to the crop would be equivalent to the addition of almost that much to our exportable surplus, for our consumption will not increase by any such amount.

TURN IN IRON TRADE.

Consumption of Pig Iron Falls Below Production for First Time Since Last August.

Production of iron during the month of April, according to the figures just compiled by The Iron Age, was on a larger scale than any previously reported, but for the first time since last Summer the consumption fell behind the production. The addition to the stocks of pig iron was small, but as is pointed out by the trade authority, the fact that there was any addition to stocks will be considered by many as offering the first suggestion that the tide in the iron trade has turned. The situation is thus summed up by The Iron Age in its issue of to-day:

> The returns of the producers of anthracite and coke pig iron show that during April, a short month, the output was 1,922,041 gross tons, an increase over March, when the product was 1,936,264 tons in thirty-one days. An additional day in April would have carried the make to 1,996,000 tons. May promises to be even a more higher record, since we entered the month with furnaces producing at the rate of 451,331 tons a week, as compared with 439,564 tons on April 1. This would indicate a May product of very close to 2,000,000 tons, exclusive of charcoal iron.
> A study of the situation at the works proves that this is sure to be the maximum for some time to come, since few new furnaces are due in the next few months, and since many producers are running at a rate which they cannot hope to maintain. Thus the United States Steel Corporation is operating 98 per cent. of its theoretical capacity.
> The most significant feature of our furnace report is, however, the fact that for the first time since August last, the stocks in the hands of merchant furnaces show an increase. The increase is small, being 17,000 tons, but it will be widely interpreted as an indication that the tide has turned.
> The decision of the steel corporation not to buy any iron in the open market in May, the softening of prices in the South, to which district the accumulation of iron has been practically confined thus far, and the disappointment over the fact that the general foundry trade has not developed as expected some months since, are all factors in the situation.
> It is interesting to note, as bearing on the attitude of pig-iron manufacturers, that a project is under consideration at Pittsburg, having for its object the control of the Bessemer and basic pig iron output of the merchant furnaces in the Mahoning and Shenango Valleys. The scheme involves a central selling agency, an Executive Committee making all the sales of Bessemer and basic grades. It is the aim to keep this iron out of the hands of brokers as much as possible. As yet the plan is in its initial stages only.
> Southern makers of pig iron openly acknowledge that the market has declined to the $13.25 basis, Birmingham, and there is evidence that $13 has been done.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, May 10.—The Iron Trade Review says:

Apart from some railroad contracts which have emphasized anew the sustaining influence exerted from that source in the past six months, the iron market has had an inactive week. The most important development in pig iron is the reduction to $13 for No. 2 foundry from Birmingham, one large Southern interest. What could be done by buyers of a round lot is yet to be determined.

It is now announced that the Steel Corporation will not buy Bessemer iron for May delivery. It is also stated that all April iron has been delivered. A 30-000-ton purchase of Bessemer iron from a Western Pennsylvania steel company is reported, deliveries over three months. Some accumulation of Bessemer iron at furnaces is now to be expected.

Additional rail orders for 83,500 tons, placed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, bring its total for 1906 up to 136,000 tons. The Boston and Maine has taken 12,000 tons, a Pacific Coast road 6,000 tons, and a Southern road 5,000 tons.

With each week steel construction looms up in a way that promises to make 1905 a record year in building. The American Bridge Company alone booked 12,000 tons the past week, and a total of 40,000 tons is pending, while in addition 80,000 tons will be required for the new Manhattan Bridge, for which specifications go out on June 1.

Independent pig manufacturers are scheduled to meet in Chicago this week to consider the advisability of an advance in prices. The new rail mill of Youngstown, O., scheduled as a factor of rail business this year, and it is understood that the appointment of associates could be announced this week.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Believe the Market to be "Sold Out" —The Transfer Tax.

The market appears to be sold out, according to the ideas of many traders, and these, never slow to see the signs of the current, have been taking advantage of every slight break to cover their short lines. "Every day that the market continues inactive," commented a trader, "will probably reduce the size of the short interest which was created by the recent collapse. Traders do not like to be short of a dull market which resists drives with some show of firmness and whatever new short lines are being put out now are only with the idea of catching the slight reactions from day to day. Believing this to be the state of the market, still I do not agree with the view of others that it would take little good news to put up the market. I think it would take less bad news to put the market down five points than it would take good news to put it up three, for he who places his judgment on what the traders will do is sure to get left. They flop from one side to the other with every wind that blows."

Like a Pup Chasing Its Tail.

"Have you ever seen a young pup chase his tail?" asked one broker of another yesterday.

"I have," said the other, "but what has that got to do with the market?"

"Well," said the first, "that is what in my opinion the traders on the floor are doing now with the market. They put it at the half and bid for it at the eighth, and they get the same stocks back that they delivered the day before."

No Action on Transfer Tax.

The Stock Exchange management has taken no definite action regarding the stock transfer tax, which becomes operative June 1. This is the date of the closing of the courts for the Summer, and the constitutionality of the law could not be brought before the court before next Fall. The penalty for non-observance of the law does not seem to be well understood. There is no law compelling buying of stamps. The transfer officers of various corporations may, however, refuse to make a transfer of stock which does not carry the stamps. If a transfer were demanded and litigation begun under mandamus proceedings the stock certificates would be tied up indefinitely.

Speyer & Co. have notified holders of their temporary certificates for United States of Mexico 4 per cent. gold bonds of 1904 that the bonds themselves will be ready for delivery at their office today, and will be issued upon surrender of the certificates. Certificates surrendered must have the coupon due June 1 attached, as the bonds delivered in exchange will carry the coupons due on that date. As the first drawing of these bonds for the sinking fund under the loan agreement is to be made on or before May 20, holders of the certificates are requested to present them for exchange at once. The bonds and coupons are printed in four languages, English, Spanish, French, and German, having been placed with investors in the various countries. In this respect they are just like the Cuban bonds.

GATES GETS A GULF LINE.

Kansas City Southern to be Out of Harriman Syndicate After May 15.

KANSAS CITY, May 10.—John W. Gates and the original Holland stockholders have secured the Harriman interests in the Kansas City Southern Railway, and on May 15 Stuart R. Knott will retire as President.

Mr. Knott will be succeeded by J. A. Edson, now General Manager of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton, who up to 1902 was President of the Kansas City Southern.

NATIONAL LEAD DIVIDEND.

May Be Paid on Common Stock, Wall Street Surmises from Circular.

The National Lead Company yesterday mailed to its stockholders a blank to be filled out and returned to the company as a permanent mailing order for dividend notices, reports of meetings, and the like. The blank read: "For all dividends due or to become due on all shares of the common stock now outstanding or that may hereafter stand on the books of the company."

It was thought in Wall Street that the latter declaration indicated, possibly, a declaration of dividend on the common stock of the National Lead. President Cole of the company was out of the city yesterday, and officers in his absence said that no special significance was to be attached to the notice.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Natural Half Pearls Dutiable at Ten Per Cent.—Other Decisions.

In a decision written by General Appraiser Sharretts the Board of United States General Appraisers yesterday sustained claims made by R. A. Breidenbach, Albert Lorsch & Co., and Nordlinger & Mamluck of New York, it being held that natural half pearls are dutiable at 10 per cent. ad valorem under the terms of the Dingley tariff law. The Collector took the view that the pearls were dutiable at the rate of 20 per cent. ad valorem under the provision in the tariff act for partly manufactured articles not enumerated. Collector Stranahan is directed to make reliquidations in accordance with the finding of the customs tribunal.

Mr. Sharretts is also the author of a decision sustaining claims filed by Thomas Shotton and the Shotton Cut Glass Works of New York relative to the rate of duty applicable to glass blanks. The General Board reduces the assessment from 60 per cent. ad valorem to 45 per cent.

Other importers' claims sustained by the customs court yesterday were by M. Park Parker, Hussa & Co., George Higgs & Co., R. A. Breidenbach, Albert Lorsch & Co., Nordlinger & Mamluck, New York.

Claims overruled were by Burley & Co., Chicago; M. Ahmann & Co., and Benziger Brothers, Port Huron, Mich.; Baeder, Adamson & Co., Philadelphia; George H. Evans, the Acker, Merrall & Condit Company, Park & Tilford, Bawo & Dotter, J. Bernard & Son, and others, New York.

Protests by Doull, Miller & Co. and Albert Lorsch & Co., New York, were partially sustained, while a claim filed by B. A. Packard, Negales, Arizona, was dismissed owing to lack of jurisdiction.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, May 10.—Money was in good demand in the market to-day for the settlement and various calls, but this was offset by the payment of nearly $10,000,000 in dividneds, &c. Discounts were easier.

The tone on the Stock Exchange was cheerful owing to the better political outlook and the steadiness of the Continental Bourses. The arrangement of the settlement restricted business. Consols opened easy, rallied a fraction, and then reacted. Home rails were buoyant on bear covering, notably Brightons.

Americans were quietly steady in the forenoon at a fraction over parity, due to bear covering. After a further improvement they reacted on account of lack of support, and closed dull.

Grand Trunk was dull on disappointing traffic returns.

Foreigners were steady. Imperial Japanese Government 6s of 1904 were quoted at 101.

Kafirs had a better tone.

Bar silver steady, 26½d per ounce.

Money 2@2¼ per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 2¼ per cent. The rate of discount in the open market for three months' bills is 2¼ per cent.

The amount of bullion taken into the Bank of England on balance to-day was £76,000.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 32; Lisbon, 8.50.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 10.—The principal point of interest in the local market to-day was United Gas Improvement. For a day or two the buying had not been as good as the preceding days, but to-day the same persistent demand recurred and, as offerings were small, the price easily advanced. Philadelphia Electric was in good demand, but the buying was not so good as yesterday. The New York buying of Electric Storage Battery was absent, but the price moved up ⅛. Fourth Street National Bank stock was off 2 points, but it had been previously ordered at 288. Lehigh Valley was stronger, but the dealings in it were small. Reading advanced in face of adverse New York reports, but local selling helped depress the Steel shares. A reactionary tendency was evidenced in Westmoreland Coal Warrants, the price receding 1⅜ points on light trading. The total sales were 42,675 shares, $102,075 bonds, as follows:

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 10.—New York exchange was at par to-day. Time and call loans, 3¼@4½ per cent. In the very dull session on the local Exchange, Chicago Subway was the feature, both for strength and activity. Before noon 600 shares were bought on the advance to 56¾, a gain from 55 at the close yesterday. Increased tonnage, new connections and a better attitude of some local financiers toward the freight tunnel project were causes suggested for the buying. Furthermore, considering the fact that the security is an untried investment, the shares held very well in the recent general slump.

Other issues fluctuated idly. Can preferred lost a large fraction early. Chicago Edison, whose annual report is due shortly, flinched again, this time on the sale of fifty shares, falling to 155½, compared with 157 Monday. Telephone and Biscuit were fairly firm early. In the afternoon Subway sold as high as 56¾. The list follows: is a most misused expression, but insuring one's family by leaving them in case of one's death, some tangible asset is the duty of every man. In what way can this be done so easily, so surely, and so satisfactorily as by leaving them a home?

The owners of Larchmont Park realize that many good fathers and husbands who want to provide for their families feel they have not the money; therefore the terms upon which the owners are offering this property have been made very easy. Everything in the way of improvement has been done; consequently no unknown expenses can crop up. Let me tell you more of this opportunity.

BIG MINER, HELD UP, SHOOTS TWO FOOTPADS

Welshman with $900 Attacked Near the Water Front.

TURNS ON HIS ASSAILANTS

Patrick O'Brien in Hospital, Shot Twice—Other Hold-Up Man Escapes with Bullet in Knee.

Patrick O'Brien, forty years old, of 121 Roosevelt Street, was shot twice yesterday, and when he comes out of the Hudson Street Hospital the probability is that he will have to face a charge of attempted robbery. His unfortunate condition arises from the fact that he and a companion, who was also shot but escaped, caught a Tartar when they attempted to hold up Evan Arnott, a big Welsh miner, and rob him of his valuables at the corner of Water and Catharine Streets.

Arnott arrived in the city two days ago on the Etruria, on which he worked his passage to this country. When he arrived he had about $900 in cash and a gold watch. He intended to stay only a few days in this city, or until he could get transit to Panama. On Tuesday night he stayed at a cheap lodging house at 9 Bowery, where it was observed that he had a good deal of money.

Arnott paid his bill yesterday morning and started down Catharine Street to the water front to arrange his passage to Colon. At the corner of Water Street he met O'Brien and the other man, and they went into a saloon. Arnott told the police later that they seemed "rough fellows, but good-hearted."

After a few drinks, Arnott said that he had business to attend to and started to leave the saloon. O'Brien and the unknown third person urged him to stay, catching him by the arms and saying he was a "bully sport." They had reached the sidewalk when Arnott realized that they were trying to go through his pockets. One of them was pulling at the chain attached to his gold watch.

"Hullo!" cried Arnott. "What are you doing?"

"That's all right, Sport," said the man who later got away. So saying he applied the strangle hold and put his right knee into the miner's back. O'Brien then dived into the Welshman's pockets.

Although Arnott found himself in an awkward position his nerve did not desert him. His hands were free. He pulled a revolver from his pocket and fired at O'Brien, who reeled back with a yell. The ball had entered his groin. Almost at the same moment the Welshman swung the revolver to his back and fired a shot into the knee that was pressing against his back. The second man dropped the miner like a hot cake and escaped in spite of his perforated leg. O'Brien staggered to his feet and limped off as fast as he could. But the miner was not through. He leveled the revolver again and brought O'Brien to the pavement, shot through the legs.

A good-sized crowd saw the battle, and Policeman Wright of the Oak Street Station ran up and took the revolver from the miner's hand. Detective Remy joined him, and after a glance at the wounded man said:

"It's O'Brien! Stranger, you ought to get a medal for this."

Arnott was taken to the Oak Street Station, where, after he told his tale, the police were ready to shake hands with him. He was formally arraigned in the Tombs Court before Magistrate Finn, who, while admiring the man's fighting qualities, was compelled to hold him without bail for examination.

O'Brien was at first thought to be in a serious condition, but later it was said that he would recover.

"Then the tables will be turned on him," said Detective McGee. "O'Brien is now the complainant against the miner, but presently O'Brien will be up for highway robbery, with Arnott as a witness for the People. That Welshman is all right!"

BULLET'S ECCENTRIC COURSE.

Travels All Through Body and Back to Spot Where It Entered.

Coroners' Physician O'Hanlon performed an autopsy yesterday on the body of Sterling Garland, who was brought from Haverstraw Monday and taken to Roosevelt Hospital suffering from a gunshot wound in the left side. Prof. Larkin, pathologist of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, was present at the autopsy. After the autopsy Prof. Larkin said that the course of the bullet was the most eccentric that he had ever seen.

"The bullet," said Dr. O'Hanlon, "entered one-half inch below the last rib on the left side of the body, about two inches to the left of the spine. It passed through the left kidney, through the posterior wall of the greater curvature of the stomach, through the left lobe of the liver, under the surface, through the diaphragm, through the pericardium, (the sack which holds the heart,) tearing away part of the left ventricle of the heart,—but not entering the cavity, and into the paricardial sack. It then struck the breast bone, rebounded, passing through the pericardium, diaphragm, and stomach, and was found resting on the nilus of the left kidney, almost at the spot where it entered the body."

Dr. O'Hanlon said that not the least remarkable phase of the case was the fact that the victim lived for twelve hours after the accident.

FINDS BAD SEWER WORK.

Fraud Attempted, Says Grout's Engineer, in Bath Beach Contract.

When Borough President Littleton of Brooklyn discharged one of his sewer Inspectors last week there were rumors of irregularities in the work done on the big sewer in Bath Avenue, Bath Beach, under a contract held by James Malloy & Co. The contract calls for a total of $208,828, and Controller Grout has held up a payment of $40,898.90.

The Controller sent one of his engineers, R. W. Creuzbaur, to investigate. The engineer's report, submitted yesterday, says:

"From the examinations made it is apparent that fraud has been attempted in carrying out the work. The sewer is not properly supported and is not constructed in accordance with good engineering practice. The stone and concrete is unfit for the purpose intended."

Controller Grout will refuse to make any payments on the contract and will suggest to President Littleton that he take action to cancel it altogether.

JUST a word about RAIN PROOF.
We don't make Raincoats of rainproof fabrics—the choice is too limited.
We pick the Smartest Woolens—then rainproof them and have them made up into HART, SCHAFFNER & MARX (Well-Known Well-Made) Overcoats.
That's why our "Raincoats" have an "air" that puts them in a class by themselves.
Paletots and Full back Coats, $35 to $15
Try on an English Walking Suit—($18.00 upward.)

We've caught some commendation and more condemnation from the trade since we told you a couple of months ago of the plight into which the sky-high price of wool has plunged all clothiers, and how many dealers are trying to escape by the use of fabrics containing mercerized cotton.

Judged from the general disclaimers rushed into print, most dealers seem to agree with us entirely as to conditions in general, but all naturally except themselves from the indictment.

So the public having been so thoroughly warned must depend now as always upon established reputations for reliability and honesty of fabric.

NEW MAGISTRATES BEGIN.

Friends Send Many Floral Offerings to Wahle and McAvoy.

When Charles G. F. Wahle, the newly appointed Police Magistrate, took up his new duties in the West Side Court yesterday, the courtroom contained many floral pieces sent by friends.

Before the Magistrate had heard the first case a delegation from the General Church Club of the Bronx, of which Magistrate Wahle was formerly President, entered the room, headed by Deputy Register H. H. Sherman. Mr. Sherman presented to the new Magistrate an ivory gavel on behalf of the club.

Magistrate Francis McAvoy occupied the bench alone in the Harlem Court for the first time yesterday, although he has been giving decisions, assisted by one of the experienced Magistrates, for several days. There were many floral gifts for the new Magistrate, all horseshoes. Two were from Mr. McAvoy's old associates in the Law Department at the Custom House. Police Captain McGlynn also sent a horseshoe. The new Magistrate appointed as his probationary officer Joseph Elting, who has been a member of the Police Department.

TORNADO'S DEAD 100; FIRE AFTER STORM

MANY OF 141 HURT WILL DIE

Disaster Came So Suddenly Many Were Caught in Street—Town in Dire Distress.

GUTHRIE, Oklahoma, May 11. — The death list of last night's tornado at Snyder will probably exceed 100 persons. Eighty-five bodies have been recovered, a dozen persons are missing and given up for dead, and of the 41 seriously wounded several are likely to die. More than 100 other persons suffered less severe injuries.

Relief is going forth from neighboring towns. Oklahoma City sent to-day 100 men to dig graves and seek the dead still in the ruins, and a dozen undertakers, with 100 coffins. Offers of financial assistance have come from numerous cities. Gov. Ferguson of Oklahoma has issued a proclamation calling attention to the needs of the stricken town.

It is still difficult to obtain information from Snyder. A single telegraph wire furnishes an outlet, but it is blocked with private messages concerning the dead and the injured.

Fire Adds to the Horror.

To add to the general confusion and distress after the tornado had passed, fire started and burned up all that remained of the buildings in one of the business blocks. So far it has not been possible to find out whether any bodies were burned.

The Mayor of Snyder is having much trouble arranging for the burial of the dead. The confusion is great, owing to the fact that there are a number of unidentified bodies at the morgues. There is much suffering owing to lack of provisions and places to stay. What houses remain in the town are in bad condition and are unsafe for habitation. Besides there is not room enough to care for the homeless. Bedding and wearing apparel are both lacking and, despite the effort to succor the unfortunates, they are still in a pitable condition.

Many of the wounded did not receive medical aid until nine o'clock this morning, and by that time their wounds were aggravated. Dr. York of Hobart, who was active in relieving the suffering says that twenty per cent. of the wounded will die.

Only a Score of Houses Intact.

The havoc wrought by the tornado is astonishing. Out of a town that housed 1,000 persons not more than a score of houses are intact, while two-thirds of the buildings are wrecked.

The storm formed south of Olustee, near the Texas line, and took a northeasterly course through a well-settled region. At 8 o'clock it was observed by the people of Snyder, but the usual funnel-shaped formation was lacking, and though the roar was plainly heard for sometime before the storm broke, many were of the opinion that it was a hailstorm. Within a few minutes, the sky suddenly became dark and a terrific downpour of rain began, lasting for several minutes. Then the rain stopped almost as suddenly as it had started. For a few moments an ominous calm followed, and then the tornado struck.

Many persons were caught in the streets and between buildings, where some were lifted high in the air and dashed to the ground as though hurled from a catapult. Others were struck by flying debris. Those who remained in their houses fared no better in the path of the tornado, which swept across all excepting a few blocks in the southeastern corner of the town. Frame structures collapsed like eggshells, burying occupants under the debris, killing, crushing, and maiming.

Six hotels and boarding houses were torn to pieces, burying many in the wreckage. North of the railroad track, where many cottages stood, nothing is left, and even the wreckage was mostly carried away.

In a few moments the tornado was all over and the air was filled with the shrieks of the injured. Within a short time messengers were dispatched to Mountain Park, three miles away, where the news was sent by telephone to Hobart. Physicians and nurses boarded relief trains made up at Mangum, Hobart, Chickasha, and Lawton and hurried to the scene by the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad.

Able-bodied survivors in Snyder worked heroically all through the night amidst the heartrending scenes. A building was utilised for a temporary hospital and another as a morgue. The latter, a dry goods building, presented a gruesome appearance when day dawned with the bodies lying tier above tier on the shelves. The search for bodies continued all the day and at dark eighty-five corpses had been recovered.

The most pressing need is money. Organization was perfected among the citizens to-day and appeals were sent out to leading citizens of the territories asking for immediate assistance.

The first intimation the outside world had of the tornado was when the long-distance telephone operator at Hobart heard the operator in the Snyder Exchange scream, as the Snyder telephone building, which was a long, narrow, wood building, was split in half by the wind.

A heavy piece of wood struck the manager, who was sitting at his desk, in the head. A young man who was in the exchange at the time grabbed the operator and pushed her into a booth and shut the door. The glass in this booth was not even cracked.

Relief Trains Hurried Out.

The first news of the storm was received here about midnight. Soon thereafter, before any details had been received, telegraph and telephone wires went down.

The first relief train, sent from Hobart, thirty-two miles north of Snyder, reached the stricken town just before daylight. Every one on board began at once the work of relief. On every hand they found the wreckage and streets almost obliterated by piles of demolished houses. In all directions evidence of the terrible havoc of the storm was apparent. The dead and dying lay about the streets, in yards, and mixed up with the wreckage, while those who had escaped ran hither and thither in excited attempts to bring order out of the terrible chaos, and to render what meagre aid they might.

W. H. Hibbard, Superintendent of Schools, and his wife, together with two children and the parents of Hibbard, were killed, only one member of the family, a boy, escaping.

Killed on Eve of Wedding.

An unidentified woman was picked up dead, having been pinioned to the ground by a large sliver which entered her left eye and came out through the back of her head.

Clarence Donovan, a railroad engineer, and Miss Nina Fessenden were to have been married last night, but had just postponed the nuptials until this morning. Both were instantly killed by the storm.

Fred Crump, a boy, had started to a cellar when a flying timber decapitated him.

Three young children in the Crook family were killed. One, a babe, was snatched from its mother's arms and dashed against a brick wall.

One of the saddest cases was that of Col. Williamson. When the storm struck, Williamson grabbed a woman whom he thought was his wife and hurried away to a place of safety. When out of danger he discovered that the woman was not his wife. Later Mrs. Williamson was brought to the temporary morgue with her head completely severed from the body.

Fifty freight cars standing in the yards were reduced to kindling wood and the railroad tracks were torn up for blocks. About seventy-five head of horses and cattle were killed.

Rush Carload of Coffins.

Ten undertakers attending the funeral directors' convention at Oklahoma City left that place this morning with a carload of caskets for Snyder.

Débris was carried northeast as far as the Cooperton, twelve miles, and it is reported that there are more fragments at that town than in the tornado's path at Snyder.

While the tornado seems to have been widespread, rumors that other towns in Southern Oklahoma had been destroyed were declared by telephone exchanges to be incorrect. However, ther was no question that much damage to property and probably loss of life had occurred in the outlying districts.

The same tornado struck Quinlan, in Woodward County, on the Santa Fé Railway, destroying several houses, and at that point at least three persons, Mrs. C. W. Cox and her two sons are known to have been killed.

Snyder is a town of about 1,000 inhabitants, in Kiowa County, in the Kiowa and Comanche Indian country. It was opened to white settlement in 1901. The town was laid out largely by the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway, at the junction of two of its lines, and the company erected important buildings there. Snyder is the division point for the Quanah Division of the road. The town was named for Bryan Snyder, Passenger Traffic Manager of the system.

Many Houses Wrecked in Kansas.

TOPEKA, Kan., May 11.—A tornado struck the town of Overbrook, twelve miles southeast of Topeka, to-day, and, passing through a thickly settled farming community, wrecked several houses and barns and unroofed others. So far as known, no one was killed. Only one person is reported injured. The same storm struck Lawrence, causing $10,000 damage, but no one was hurt.

Lightning Kills Mother and Son.

LANCASTER, Ohio, May 11.—Mrs. Alexander Schafer and her six-year-old son were struck and fatally injured by lightning to-day. Mrs. Elizabeth Schafer, who was also in the house, was uninjured. The house was wrecked.

BRAUN FINED IN BUDAPEST.

Special Immigrant Inspector Incurs Authorities' Resentment.

BUDAPEST, May 11.—American Immigrant Inspector Marcus Braun has become involved in serious trouble with the Hungarian authorities.

Mr. Braun alleges that the authorities tampered with and opened his letters. He was fined $10 in a Budapest Police Court for threatening a Police Department detective whom, he says, he discovered in the act of tampering with his mail.

To-night the Hungarian State Police Department makes public a communication declaring that Mr. Braun cannot show credentials proving his relations with the American Government, and that the American authorities have not informed the Hungarian Government in any manner of the nature of Mr. Braun's mission here.

The communication concludes by warning the public against Braun.

Mr. Braun has letters from the American authorities giving him latitude in investigations in Europe and also a special passport from the State Department, which is only issued to American officials.

Mr. Braun is a Hungarian by birth and emigrated to the United States about fifteen years ago. It is understood that he has been investigating reports that the Hungarian authorities encouraged undesirable persons to emigrate to the United States.

WASHINGTON, May 11.—Mr. Braun is one of three Special Immigrant Inspectors now engaged in Europe on special work for the Immigration Bureau, the exact character of which the officials here decline to state.

Mr. Braun was in Hungary last year for the Immigration Bureau, and brought home much valuable information relating to immigration, and it is presumed that this may have a bearing on the present attitude of the Budapest police toward him.

He is the President of the Hungarian Club of New York, which in the Spring entertained President Roosevelt in that city.

PRESIDENT BACK HOME AFTER HIS RECORD TRIP

Had Fine Time, but Glad to Take Up Work Again.

MESSAGE TO MRS. McKINLEY

Train Did Not Stop at Canton, but President's Letter Was Dropped Off There for Predecessor's Widow.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 11.—Precisely at midnight to-night the President's train drew into the Sixth Street Station, out of which at 9 o'clock on Monday morning, April 3, it started westward for the most remarkable outing ever enjoyed by a President of the United States. There were at the station to welcome the President, Assistant Secretary Barnes and several of the White House attachés.

Hardly a moment passed after the train came to a standstill before the President appeared at the forward door of the car, trimly attired in silk hat and brown overcoat, and looking as unlike the mighty hunter returning from the chase as could well be imagined. He stopped and shook hands with the three negro porters, bade them good night, and thanked them for their service to him. He then shook hands with the conductor and stepped down to the platform, saying: "Good evening all, I am surely glad to be home once more."

The President's face bore a ruddy color.

Dr. Lambert and Mr. Roosevelt entered the President's carriage from one of the side entrances of the station, and went at once to the White House. Mr. Loeb, with Gifford Pinchot, the Government forester, took the second carriage and followed. This was all of the President's party to return, Gen. Young and Lieut. Fortescue, who went out with Mr. Roosevelt, having left the party in the West.

The waiting crowd watched the carriages fade into the darkness, and some thoughtful man remarked:

"Well, where are the bears?"

"I suppose," said Mr. Barnes, "they are on ice in the baggage car."

"Oh, no," said John Tyree, the President's bodyguard, who carried the only piece of baggage in evidence in the party, in the shape of a Boston terrier, "the bears are all coming by freight."

The President traveled 6,006 miles and passed through twelve States and three Territories—Maryland, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Indian Territory, Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Colorado, Nebraska, and Iowa.

Every State and Territory in the United States, except Florida and Arkansas, has been visited by Mr. Roosevelt since he became President, and it is intention to accept the hospitality of these States before his term is finished. It is probable that he will make a tour of the South some time before the convening of Congress in the Fall of this year.

The President was particularly pleased with the manner in which he was received in Chicago. Banquets were numerous on the trip, but the President told the crew of his car, Rocket, that he never enjoyed anything more than the dinners they prepared for him.

President Roosevelt was disappointed because no arrangements had been made to have his train stop at Canton, Ohio, on the return home. A letter was dropped off at the station to be delivered to Mrs. McKinley. The greeting from the President was as follows:

"Pray accept my best wishes and earnest hope that you are feeling well. I never knew that the train was to pass through Canton until after it had started from Chicago, and I found that it was too late to change the schedule. Otherwise I should have stopped to see you in person.

"May all blessings attend you."

Praise the Stand He Took Regarding Chicago Strike.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, May 11.—Without an exception labor leaders of Pittsburg express themselves as highly pleased and heartily in accord with the statement made by President Roosevelt to the committee representing the trades unions of Chicago yesterday. Patrick Dolan, President of the United Mine Workers, said:

"The President never uttered truer words than when he said that the laws had to be obeyed by rich and poor alike. I am positive that while the President is in favor of unions, he will not tolerate lawlessness which is perpetrated under the guise of unionism. It is high time that the union men, at least some of them, realize the fact that strikes and the general disorder that usually follows them must be done away with.

"I regard the move made by Mr. Roosevelt as tantamount to his disapproval of strikes. There is always another way to end differences between employer and employe. The President will always have a warm welcome in the hearts of American workingmen, whose interests, I believe, he is striving hard to advance."

Stock Growers Indorse His Stand on Railroad Rates.

DENVER, May 11.—Resolutions were adopted to-day by the American Stock Growers' Association thanking President Roosevelt for "his fight for equal rights to all at the hands of the railroads."

The resolutions declare that the present railroad law is inadequate, "and should be strengthened by giving to the Inter-State Commerce Commission power to substitute just, fair, and reasonable rates for those which it may find on investigation to be unjust or unreasonable," and demands "that the Senate of the United States shall cease obstructing the application of that great principle, reciprocity, which we regard as essential to extend our foreign markets for agricultural and stock products."

NO AID FOR DROWNING MAN.

Tug Went on After Upsetting Canoe, One of Pair Says.

The wash of a tug which was going south on the Harlem River at a rapid rate yesterday afternoon overturned a canoe in which two men were paddling opposite Two Hundred and Eighteenth Street. One of the canoeists was drowned. The other was saved by clinging to the bottom of the canoe until an attendant at one of the many boathouses which dot the riverside reached him.

The drowned man was Peter Hughes, twenty-two years old, of 5,191 Broadway. His body was recovered. Leo W. Larney, who was Hughes's companion, and who is also twenty-two years old, lives at 5,119 Broadway.

The two men, both of whom were experts with the paddle, started out from King's Bridge about half an hour before the accident. When the canoe was upset both men sank. On coming up Larney seized hold of the boat and clung to it. Hughes also came to the surface near by, but the swift current was more than he could breast, and he sank again with a despairing cry within sight of Larney, who was unable to aid him in the least.

In the meantime Larney was calling lustily for help to the men on the tug, but he declares that they paid no attention to him, and the tug disappeared in a bend in the river. Larney's cries, however, were heard on shore, and several boatmen and those employed in the rowing clubs about came running out. One of them, Howard Grandie, who is employed at Allen's boathouse, at Fordham Heights, at the foot of Two Hundred and Fourteenth Street, saw the upset, rowed out, dived over, got Larney and swam with him to the rowboat. Both got into the boat, and Larney was taken ashore.

KILL SNAKE IN FIFTH AVENUE.

Boys Stone Reptile to Death—Trophy in Police Station.

Gliding up Fifth Avenue last night at 9 o'clock, a ten-foot snake caused a stampede among pedestrians on the west side of the avenue in the neighborhood of Eighteenth Street. All women who saw it ran away. The men to whom it was pointed out answered peevishly "Go 'way; you can't fool me." Then they turned pale, and walked hurriedly on.

Little girls who saw it ran away screaming. So it remained for a battalion of youngsters, ranging from eight to sixteen years of age, to slay the dragon.

Like African pigmies battling with an elephant, the youngsters followed the poor boa constrictor, for such it was, two blocks, yelling with glee as they stoned the reptile. The snake was at least eight inches in circumference at the largest part of the body; it could find no hole to run into. So it kept on gliding up Fifth Avenue. Now and then it turned on its enemies, but they ran away only to return again. At last they killed it with the stones they had been using.

The boys carried the body to the Tenderloin Police Station in a sack. Some wag tied the head of the snake high up on an iron pillar in the centre of the station, then wound its beautiful spotted body around the pole and tied it at the bottom. More than one prisoner brought in charged with being drunk and disorderly looked askance at the centre pillar.

Having taken the boa constrictor to the station house, and perceiving by the attention paid them that they had done something out of the ordinary, the boys went outside and had a fight about who killed the snake.

Following are the names of some of the boys in the forefront of the battle against Fifth Avenue's boa constrictor: Alfred Mander of 160 West Twentieth Street, Thomas O'Neill of 156 West Twentieth Street, Lewis Mulvaney of 167 West Nineteenth Street, Edward Murphy of 155 Seventh Avenue, and William Rennahan of 103 West Seventeenth Street. There were several others.

As Master Mulvaney said, "We wuz up to th' Garden to try to cop a look at th' show. But there wus nuthin' doin', an' so we got together and walked down Fift' Av'noo to see what fun we could find. Gee! but we found it."

No one was found who satisfactorily explained how the boa constrictor got on Fifth Avenue. Some suggested that it had escaped from the circus and had been hiding in a lot.

GEN. IVES'S FAST YACHT.

The Vitesse Shows Phenomenal Speed on the Hudson.

Gen. Brayton Ives's new yacht, Vitesse, promises to break all speed records for steam craft, outclassing anything afloat, if her preliminary trials are any indication of her power. She had her first try-out on Tuesday, and another yesterday, and attained both days a maximum speed of 29.75 miles an hour, and an average speed of 27.12. Her first mile with new engines and boilers over an accurately measured course was made at the rate of 22 miles an hour, and her second nearly 25. The later trials over a mile run showed a maximum speed of a mile in 2 minutes and 1 second, which is 29¾ miles an hour.

The trials were made over a nine-mile straightaway on the Hudson, mile stretches being tried at a time. She was driven up stream a mile and then back so as to take full account of conditions of tide and wind. Everything was done to assure the greatest accuracy and to avoid exaggeration.

Gen. Ives proposes to use the boat in daily trips to New York from his country seat at Ossining and for general pleasure sailing, as he can carry a party of ten or twelve aboard her without discomfort. To be sure, he will race her, but only in line with his general idea "to get as much fun out of her as I can," as he expresses it.

She measures 118 feet over all, and is of wood construction from the design of Charles L. Seabury. She was built at the Morris Heights yard of the Gas Engine and Power Company, and is fitted with triple expansion, twin screw, 900-horse-power engine with Seabury tubular boilers, bearing a steam pressure at speed of 300 pounds.

PICKPOCKET'S JERSEY FATE.

Pier, Street, Court—Three Months in the Penitentiary.

Just before the Hamburg-American liner Bluecher sailed from Hoboken for Hamburg yesterday morning Theodore S. Darling of Dean, N. J., one of the saloon passengers, felt a hand manoeuvring in his starboard trousers pocket. The owner of the hand was a young and vigorous man, who shook off the restraining hand of Mr. Darling, dashed down the gangplank, and started on a run down the pier.

He succeeded in reaching River Street, where a number of men joined in the chase. After a block's run the young man was captured by Policeman Peters, who escorted him to Recorder Stanton's court, where he said he was Harry Davis of Sixth Street, Manhattan. Recorder Stanton sentenced him to three months in the penitentiary.

COUNT WITH $8 TAKES BROOCH WORTH $1,500

Fled Without Paying Anything—Police and Clerks Get Him.

BROADWAY SEES THE CHASE

He Wanted It as a Present, He Said—Lost 39,000f. at Monte Carlo Recently.

Count Raggi Carlo—such he said he was, anyway—thirty-two years old, born in Austria of Italian parentage, sauntered leisurely into the jewelry store of Labolt & Co., at 54 West Twenty-third Street, late yesterday afternoon, to get a brooch. His demeanor was so aristocratic and he was so patently a rich man that two clerks leaped to wait on him.

The Count is a young man of dark complexion, well groomed, with his mustachios curled about his nose like the tusks of a wild boar. Yesterday afternoon he whirled a gold-headed cane. Now and then he pulled out a gold cigarette case.

The two Labolt salesmen who waited on the "Count" with much politeness were Julius M. Strauss and Louis Schneider. The policeman who arrested "Count Raggi" at Broadway and Twenty-seventh Street at the instance of the two salesmen was Daniel O'Connell. And the composite story of what the "Count" did to be arrested, as told by the three, runs as follows:

"Count Raggi went into the store a little before 6 o'clock. He wanted to see some brooches. He looked at one trayful, but suggested they were too cheap. Another trayful was shown to him. He then laid aside a brooch with eight diamonds in it, valued at $1,500, which he said was not so bad. He said he would consider that a possible choice. One of the salesmen stooped down to draw out another trayful of more costly brooches. When he looked up 'Count Raggi' was gone.

"The two salesmen, not desiring to make a scene, and fearing to tackle the 'Count' alone, followed him east to Broadway and up to Twenty-seventh Street. There Strauss saw O'Connell, and the salesman drew close to 'Count Raggi,' grabbed him by the arms and shouted, 'Police!'

"The usual Broadway crowd gathered as the three men struggled. O'Connell forced his way through and arrested 'Count Raggi Carlo.'"

Charged with grand larceny, the "Count" slept in the Tenderloin Station last night. The charge was made by the two salesmen. The brooch was found on the prisoner.

According to O'Connell, the prisoner said he was a guest of the Waldorf-Astoria. He did have some of the hotel's stationery on him. It was denied at the hotel last night that any such man had been stopping there recently.

The prisoner also had on him cards which read thus: "Raggi, Conte, Carlo." He had $8.

Last night Capt. Cottrell secured the services of an interpreter to question "Count Raggi." The prisoner said he knew no English, but spoke French fluently. According to the interpreter, the "Count's" story ran like this:

"I lost 39,000f. at Monte Carlo a few weeks ago, and drifted over here to get help from a friend of mine, whose name I will not mention. I went into the Waldorf to see what a fine hotel it was, and took away with me some of the stationery.

"I have been living at a boarding house run by a lady named English. I can't remember either her address or her initials.

"I got the brooch for a young lady friend whose acquaintance I have just recently made.

"I will not tell you any more about myself than that I am a Count, born in Austria of Italian parents."

POLICEMAN KILLS SOLDIER.

Tragedy Follows Pay Day at Fort Monroe—A Riot Averted.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT NEWS, May 11.—Yesterday was pay day at Fort Monroe, and Phoebus, which adjoins the reservation, was filled with soldiers this afternoon.

Three of them who were caught violating a town ordinance were reprimanded by a policeman named Phillips. Artilleryman Dowrl of the Eighty-sixth Company, Heavy Coast Artillery, sought a fight with the town officer, who then tried to arrest the artillerymen. Six other soldiers came to Dowrl's assistance, and Phillips was roughly handled.

Townspeople came to the officer's assistance and put the soldiers to flight. Phillips then tried to capture his assailant, and, with two other officers, cut off his line of retreat. According to Phillips, Dowrl advanced in a threatening manner and refused to halt when called upon to do so, whereupon Phillips shot him through the right breast. The artilleryman died before reaching the hospital.

Intense excitement followed, and a riot was feared. The Commandant at the fort, however, ordered out a company of soldiers and got all the artillerymen back on the reservation. An investigation has been ordered.

TWO CORNELL MEN DROWNED.

G. M. Seymour of This City and Companion in Canoe Upset by Squall.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, May 11.—Two Cornell students were drowned in Cayuga Lake last night by the overturning of a canoe. They were George M. Seymour, Jr., of New York, and Charles T. Sperry of North Adams, Mass. Both were members of the sophomore class, the former in Sibley College of Mechanical Engineering and the latter in the College of Civil Engineering. Both were members of Theta Xi fraternity.

George M. Seymour, Jr., lived with his father at 246 West One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Street. He was the youngest son, the family consisting of two other brothers and a sister. He was twenty-two years old, and was a sophomore at Cornell. The young man was last home at Christmas, but in a letter received a few days ago he wrote at length of the joy he anticipated in June when he would come home for the Summer vacation.

Mr. Seymour, the father, is with the Edison Company. He said his son was exceptionally promising, having won a prize of $300 and another of $400 before he went to college from the De Witt High School, thus practically paying his college expenses for the first year.

KILLED BY STRANGE DRUG.

Man Picked Up in Ferryhouse Died in Hospital.

Suffering from some unknown drug, an unidentified man was found last evening in the ferryhouse of the Long Island Railroad at the foot of East Thirty-fourth Street. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital, where he died at midnight.

The man is about fifty years old and is 5 feet 8 inches in height. He wore a black suit and had a Masonic button.

When one of the surgeons in the hospital searched the man's clothing he found in the inside pocket of the vest a card bearing the name of "Milton A. Brown, Consolidated Gas Company, 112-114 West Forty-second Street," which had been overlooked by the police. Officials of the gas company will be asked to go to the hospital to identify the man.

HEEDS SWAYNE CASE HINT.

Judge Grosscup of Chicago No Longer Charges $10 a Day Expenses.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 11.—Judge Peter Grosscup has ceased to charge $10 a day for expenses while serving as Judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. He has itemized his expense account since the impeachment proceedings brought against Judge Swayne of Florida in the United States Senate last Fall.

This discovery was made to-day. It was learned also that the other Judges of the same bench have adopted the same method of itemizing their expenses.

Judge Grosscup has his residence at Highland Park. He puts in no expense account when he comes into Chicago daily to sit upon the Federal bench. But when the United States Circuit Court of Appeals met in Chicago it was his custom, up to a few months ago, to charge an expense account of $10 a day.

HORSE PLUNGED INTO AUTO.

Slippery Fifth Avenue Pavement Caused a Tangle.

An automobile, in which were Dr. Henry V. Broeser and his wife of 710 Washington Street, Hoboken, came into collision with a horse driven by Fred A. Clark of 347 West Eighty-ninth Street last night in front of St. Patrick's Cathedral. The automobile was driven by Otto Schaeffer, also of Hoboken.

In order to avoid running over a horse attached to a hansom cab, which had fallen on the slippery pavement directly in front of him, Schaeffer turned to the left, and met Clark's rig going in the opposite direction.

Schaeffer to avoid Clark drove the automobile up on the curb, but Clark's horse became unmanageable and plunged into the automobile. The chauffeur narrowly escaped.

When the tangle was somewhat straightened out, Dr. Broeser and Mr. Clark went to the East Fifty-first Street Station, where each wished to make a complaint. They were advised to settle the affair amicably and after an exchange of cards departed.

CHARGES AGAINST CUTLER.

Humane Society Demands Investigation of Galveston's Commander.

Special to The New York Times.

GALVESTON, May 11.—Personal appeals from members of the crew of the cruiser Galveston received here have prompted the Humane Society of this city to file charges against Commander W. G. Cutler with the Navy Dpartment, demanding an investigation.

The statements of the men to be used, it is alleged, show conditions on board the warship to have been even worse than the accounts published. The men formally charge the Commander with having served tainted food after complaints had been made to him.

The charges also cite several cases where men fell from exhaustion on duty, having gone hungry rather than eat the food served. For the most trivial offense, it is alleged, the commander placed the men in irons, and on bread and water rations.

The men say a petition, filed with the Navy Department asking for an investigation, has been ignored, and that to attempt to file a complaint with the department through the commander would mean severe punishment for the complaints.

TEACHER SAVES A CAMP.

Miss Melton's Coolness Prevents Its Destruction by Fire.

Special to The New York Times.

HELENA, Mon., May 11.—Miss Ida Melton, teacher of the district school at the little mining camp of Rimini, near here, to-day saved the camp from destruction by fire through her coolness and nerve.

Fire started while school was in progress, and while all the men of Rimini were engaged in the mines. Miss Melton immediately dismissed the school, and then set to work to meet the danger which threatened the town. The buildings at Rimini are flimsy frame structures, and had the fire in the schoolhouse gained headway, the whole camp would have gone.

Miss Melton organised a children's fire brigade, the little ones responding vigorously, bringing water in buckets. Before long the fire was extinguished.

Scenes of Horror Along the Tracks at Harrisburg — Samuel S. Shubert Among the Dangerously Injured.

Special to The New York Times.

HARRISBURG, Penn., May 11.—A score of persons are known to have been killed and more than 100 injured in the railroad wreck and dynamite explosion which occurred shortly after 1 o'clock this morning on the southern outskirts of this city when the Cleveland and Cincinnati express, carrying two coaches and six heavy Pullman sleeping cars, crashed into a car loaded with many hundreds of pounds of dynamite.

The train carried a number of prominent persons and most of them escaped with slight injuries. Among those on the train, which left Philadelphia Wednesday night at 11:05, were Mr. and Mrs. James Robert Tindel of Pittsburg, Mrs. Tindel being the daughter of United States Senator Knox; Mrs. A. J. Barr, wife of the proprietor of The Pittsburg Post, and her two daughters; Victor L. Crabbe of Pittsburg, son-in-law of Robert Pitcairn, assistant to President Cassatt of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and Sam S. Shubert, manager of various New York theatres. Mr. Crabbe died in the Harrisburg Hospital at noon a few minutes before his father-in-law reached his bedside. Mr. Shubert is very seriously injured and may die. The others were only slightly hurt.

Flames Scattered Broadcast.

The exact cause of the wreck seems very well defined. A shifting engine out of place was steaming toward the eastbound freight train on the southern outskirts of the city. The freight engineer, seeing the danger, quickly applied the emergency air brakes, and his heavy train came to a sudden stop.

About thirty cars back was the boxcar loaded with dynamite consigned to the Kerbaugh Contracting Company at Columbia. The sudden stop caused this car to "buckle," that is to bend in the middle. It slowly toppled over toward the west-bound passenger track.

As it did so, the express, traveling at the rate of sixty miles an hour, dashed by. The engineer and fireman both saw the danger, but their only hope was to try to get past before the freight car struck the track.

The huge locomotive, the tender, a combination baggage and smoking car and a day coach got by in safety. The next second there was a mighty explosion. The first Pullman, the Socrates, loaded with sleeping passengers for Pittsburg, "sidewiped" the dynamite-laden box car, causing its contents to explode. A second later the boiler of the passenger locomotive blew up, and freight cars and sleepers were quickly ablaze.

Both trains stopped within their own lengths. Immediately all the cars in the express and eight or ten of the freight cars were a mass of flames. The first explosion of the dynamite had scattered a tremendous volume of flame through both trains. Its terrific force had thrown sleeping passengers from their seats and their berths.

To add to the horror, a series of smaller explosions then occurred. These were caused by the flames reaching the gas tanks under the coaches. These in exploding shot through the floors and spread the flames from end to end of the cars.

The wildest excitement and confusion prevailed. Men, women, and children, hemmed in this veritable inferno, obeying the first instinctive law of nature, made an individual and terrible struggle to escape. Screams, agonising cries for help, shouted prayers, and oaths mingled with the noise of rending timbers and the hissing and crackling of the flames.

Singly and by twos and threes, the terror-crazed passengers, most of them nearly naked, dragged themselves from the burning wreckage. Some crawled out of windows, others squirmed from under the cars. Still others came out of the doors at the end of the cars, while a few clambered through the roofs which had been torn off.

Turned to Aid Others.

But once seemingly safe their mad desire for escape ceased, and many turned their attention to the more unfortunate passengers who could not get out. Men and women, their nightclothes torn to shreds or burned off, ran hither and thither over the cruel, cutting cinders and sharp stone ballast. Sparks flew around them, tongues of flame swirled toward them. Some faltered, others began the work of rescue.

For the most part it was a task that could not be accomplished. The flames made such quick headway that almost in a twinkling of an eye every coach was a blaze, and those who were pinned under the wreck were doomed. Their cries for succor were piteous, but they were in vain.

Harrisburg Rushes to the Rescue.

The terrific detonations were heard through every part of Harrisburg. Windows half a mile from the scene of the wreck were shattered and hundreds of persons ran to the wreck. The patrol were particularly prompt in getting there and they rendered efficient service. Patrol wagons and fire apparatus were soon at hand and many persons were saved from death because of this promptitude.

Seats, blankets, and other materials were used as temporary cots, and as fast as the injured were taken from the burning cars they were carried to this improvised hospital. Several physicians arrived shortly after the collision and rendered prompt service.

After the victims of the wreck were beyond human aid more attention was paid to the injured, who presented a pitiable sight as they lay along the banks of the Susquehanna River. As quickly as the injured could be relieved they were placed on either a special train or on trolley cars and rushed to the hospital.

The residents of this sparsely settled neighborhood did their utmost for the injured and those who escaped in their night clothes. Blankets and bedding and clothes were taken to the scene by the wagon load. Nearly every one was made as comfortable as possible for the trip to the hospital.

For a time the fierce flames kept the firemen back, but gradually they worked up on the burning cars and soon had the blaze under control. They fought heroically while the work of rescue was going on. It was a fireman who, dragging a heavy hose to a point of vantage along the river bank, discovered the mutilated body of H. K. Thomas, the engineer of the express. It is thought that Thomas was blown through his cab and sent hurtling through the air almost to the river's edge.

It was in the Pullman that got the full broadside of the dynamite that the flames were first subdued. Caught like rats in a trap, the sleeping passengers in this car had been stunned by the explosion and escape rendered impossible. Huddled together the firemen found what was left of ten bodies, most of them unrecognizable. Not one whole body was found in the entire wreck.

At the Harrisburg Hospital every physician and nurse in the city worked incessantly after the first of the injured was taken there at 2:30 this morning. Dr. David C. Funk was in charge of the work. The hospital was crowded to the door, and row after row of cots occupied the wards. Chairs were utilized as beds for the children, and the benches in the chapel were used to make comfortable the less seriously injured.

Bright Examples of Self-Sacrifice.

One bright feature of the disaster which stood out sharply on a plane with the more spectacular deeds of daring heroism was the self-sacrifice of many of the passengers. Chivalry and generosity in these trying circumstances were manifested in a manner calculated to shake the theories of the most convinced pessimists who affirm that selfishness is the dominant trait of human nature nowadays.

In the hospitals many persons in great pain who, for some time, had waited their turn for treatment, resigned their places and went out into the corridors when persons in worse plight than themselves were brought in.

A Pittsburg man named Williams, who had bound up his own injuries, which consisted of burns of both hands and feet, left the dispensary to make way for others, and while standing in the hall fainted from exhaustion.

Very few of the passengers who escaped had any clothing to speak of. Most of them had been in their berths at the time of the explosion, and escaped in pajamas or other light apparel, and when dawn lightened Market Street the pedestrians on the Capital City's principal thoroughfare presented a grotesque appearance. In the districts where the hotels are situated, men who had passed through the wreck without injury or with merely slight hurts, and who had declined to avail themselves of accommodation at the hostelries because there were wearied women who needed the rooms, walked around with nothing on save raincoats and bedroom slippers, and a few of them had merely bathrobes and overshoes.

It was not long, however, after the roused city began to learn of the catastrophe, before every one was amply provided for. As soon as the disaster became known a large number of Harrisburg's wealthy citizens sent their equipages to the scene to carry the injured and also sent great quantities of cotton and linen bandages. Some who resided near the hospital sent their best table linen. Hundreds of people, less able, rendered just as acceptable service.

The railroad company sent hundreds of men to the wreck, where the work of clearing up the débris was at once undertaken. Soon more than 1,000 men were at work. A huge wrecking crane lifted the shattered locomotive from the track and threw it down the embankment. Truck after truck followed, and soon all the twisted iron and steel was off the track. The laborers, with shovel and rake, cleared away the smaller débris, and by noon the track was clear.

It was one of the quickest jobs of its kind on record. Traffic was not delayed to any great extent with the exception of a number of freight trains, which were held up for several hours.

OFFICIAL EXPLAINS WRECK.

Superintendent Shaeffer Says It Could Not Have Been Avoided.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 11.—News of the wreck at Harrisburg was sent to the homes of General Manager Atterbury and C. M. Shaeffer, Superintendent of Passenger Transportation, early this morning. Mr. Atterbury was at his office before 6 o'clock. Mr. Shaeffer appeared a few minutes later. It was their intention to go at once to the scene of the disaster, and a private car was ordered to Broad Street Station. Later both officials decided to remain here.

Orders were issued by the General Manager that the newspapers receive all information obtained, and friends of those on the ill-fated train were advised of the latest news. Long before 9 o'clock, when the offices opened, a crowd of anxious ones had assembled. Mr. Shaeffer issued his first bulletin about this time.

Concerning the cause of the wreck, Mr. Shaeffer said:

"A shifting engine was taking several cars from the east-bound track into the lower Harrisburg freight yards. A flagman was stationed at its rear to warn any approaching east-bound freight train. A fast freight rounded a curve and sighted the flagman, and the engineer put on his air brakes with full force. The sudden stop caused the train to buckle.

"The train was made up of sixty-eight cars, and it chanced that cars Nos. 34 and 35 were thrown off the track across the west-bound track. Before the train crew could flag the passenger train it was down upon the freight wreck, and the locomotive struck the two cars. It was then that Engineer Thomas was killed.

"The locomotive of the passenger train was overturned, and the combination coach and the day coach were thrown down the embankment. Among the latter the explosion occurred, and death and destruction were wrought. Before the wrecking crews could do much the passenger train was burned completely up.

"It was an accident that could not be avoided. Every precaution known to train operation was in effect, and, so far as I can see, there was not a single violation."

NEW YORKERS IN PERIL, SOME BADLY INJURED

Samuel S. Shubert Among Those Dangerously Hurt in Wreck.

RESCUED BY THALEHEIMER

Other Survivors Reach Home and Tell of Narrow Escapes and Scenes of Horror.

HARRISBURG, May 11.—Samuel S. Shubert, the New York theatrical manager, who was gravely injured, was on his way to Pittsburg with William J. Kline, his attorney, and Abe Thalehelmer, manager of the "Fantana" Company. They were parties to a lawsuit which came up in that city to-day. Mr. Shubert owes his life to Mr. Thalehelmer who rescued his employer in spite of the latter's pleading, "Let me die. Let me stay here and die."

Mr. Thalehelmer and Mr. Shubert were in the last Pullman car but one, and occupied berths in different parts of the sleeper.

"I was asleep," said Mr. Thalehelmer, "when I was awakened by a terrific explosion, followed by a second one almost as severe. I think I owe my life to the fact that I broke the glass in the window of my berth. I used my hands and got them pretty well cut up.

"I was not scalded or burned, however, and crawled out of the window with nothing on but my pajamas. I made my way down the embankment at the side of the railroad, and then I thought of Sam. By the light of the burning cars I could see him pinned in his berth. Crawling up on a portion of the car which had been blown off I managed to get at Mr. Shubert, and tried to arouse him to a sense of his danger. 'Go away and let me die,' he pleaded, but I simply answered 'Not to-day,' and pulled him back from the car.

"In my bare feet I climbed down over the sharp stones of the embankment, again carrying Sam on my back. I put him down on the river bank and then got a car cushion for him to rest on, and grabbed the carpet from the floor to cover him with.

"We were brought to town in the Pennsylvania's relief train and taken to the hospital and subsequently we were removed here to the Commonwealth Hotel.

"Mr. Shubert is very badly burned on the legs and hips, but we hope he will pull through. In my anxiety for him I forgot that I was almost naked and covered with blood until I was reminded of that fact in the hospital."

D. Myer of 21 West One Hundred and Fourteenth Street, New York, was in a day coach. He said when the explosions occurred the car was lifted and thrown down the embankment, where it lodged. The roof broke like an egg shell, and he was blown through the top. He, too, landed in the Susquehanna, but managed to scramble out alone. His body is a mass of bruises and cuts, but he refused to go to the hospital, preferring to get home.

Treated with Great Kindness.

"The Jews of Harrisburg have been the personificaiton of kindness to Mr. Shubert and myself. We lost all our clothing and money, but they supplied us with more of both than we could use. I called up Samuel F. Nixon of Nixon & Zimmerman on the telephone at 4 o'clock this morning and told him of Mr. Shubert's condition, and he sent a nurse for him on the next train."

Mr. Thalheimer is badly cut on the face, hands, and feet, but none of his injuries is serious. Mr. Kline was not injured.

Dr. O. M. Leiser of New York arrived this afternoon, and has taken personal charge of Mr. Shubert. He is hopeful for him, but admits that Mr. Shubert is burned very badly. Mr. Shubert's mother and sister arrived from New York to-night.

George Sullivan, New York representative of the Carnegie Steel Company, was cut and bruised about the body, but not seriously hurt. He was with H. P. Bope of Pittsburg, Vice President of the Carnegie Steel Company, who also was slightly injured. They are being made comfortable at the home of Banker James Bailey.

Lost $17,000 Worth of Jewelry.

Henry Silverman, a New York jewelry salesman, had a satchel in his berth which contained $17,000 worth of fine jewelry, samples of goods for the Christmas holidays. Mr. Silverman was compelled to leave everything in the passenger coach to escape being burned to death. He could not find his bag in the darkness, and it was destroyed in the flames.

Miss Hilmira Erickson of New York escaped with a few bruises, but almost unclothed. She was asleep in her berth when the explosion occurred, and the second shock threw her to the floor. Struggling to her feet, she saw an open window. The heavy smoke which had penetrated the car told of the burning wreck without.

She managed to escape from the car unaided, and ran up and down the river shore, weeping and pleading for help. Here she was found, suffering from cold and shock, and, wrapped in a blanket, was brought to a Harrisburg hotel.

Miss Gardner of New York escaped to a shanty near the scene of the wreck with nothing of her clothing left save a shred of nightgown. She was dressed by the wife of a workingman and sent to Harisburg.

J. C. Francesconi of 447 Forty-sixth Street, Brooklyn and a member of the firm of Hansen & Francesconi, stock brokers of 78 Broad Street, was in the sleeping car Tyrolean on his way to Louisville. He occupied a lower berth. About 11:05 o'clock he was awakened by the sound of a muffled explosion and a heavy jar. He leaped out of his berth and found that the car was tilting to one side. Clad only in his pajamas, he made his way to the door, and there ascertained that a collision had occurred.

"I did not know how serious the accident had been," said Mr. Francesconi, "so I made my way back to my berth. No sooner did I reach there than one car was almost lifted off its trucks by a powerful explosion. I was hurled back against the opposite berth and suffered a severe gash on the rear of the head. This wound partially stunned me, and I knew nothing else until I opened my eyes and found myself on the river bank. The injury was dressed, and in a short time I was able to take care of myself.

"I walked back to our car, but was unable to get inside. The car was wrecked and all my possessions were lost. I place my loss at about $700. For the moment I paid no attention to this, but ran ahead to see how much damage had been done.

"Piled up along the tracks were freight and passenger cars burning fiercely. The flames leaped high in the air, giving forth a heat so intense as to preclude any possibility of near approach. From the midst of the flames came the cries and moans of the injured. Many of them, pinned down to the ground by their limbs, had their arms extended in a pitiful appeal for aid. There were men and women shrieking and calling upon us to help them, but for a few moments we were helpless. Every man that attempted to reach the wreck again was driven back by the heat.

"Several men, who cast aside all fear of death, rushed into the terrible furnace, only to come back with blistered hands and faces.

"Not until the Fire Department arrived upon the scene was there any organized effort to rescue the injured, and the work of relief was pushed along vigorously.

Survivors Reach New York.

Stray survivors of the Harrisburg wreck, who had been fortunate enough to escape serious injury, returned to their homes in this city on late trains over the Pennsylvania Railroad yesterday afternoon and evening. Tearful scenes were witnessed in the Jersey City terminal as groups of relatives waiting for their return found their dear ones restored to them.

For the most part the survivors were too dazed to give a connected account of the gruesome incidents that attended the catastrophe or of their own miraculous escapes from the burning train, and their stories were elicited only by dint of patient and careful questioning.

Mrs. Frederick Picker of 121 St. Nicholas Avenue, with her two little sons, Lawrence, five years old, and Jerome, seven, returned on the Atlantic Express, which arrived at Jersey City at 7:55 last evening. Mrs. Picker, who is the wife of a wealthy liquor dealer in Harlem, was on her way to visit a sister at Bellaire, Ohio, when caught in the wreck.

"I was occupying a lower berth in one of the Pullman cars," said Mrs. Picker, "when I was awakened by a tremendous shock, which hurled me against the bulkhead of the berth. The next moment my little boy, Jerome, caught hold of my arm and cried out: 'Oh, mother, the roof of the car is falling down.'

"I was too dazed at first to realize what was going on or that the upper berth with its occupant was falling down on me and my little ones and that in another minute we would be pinned fast. I soon understood, however, that something terrible had happened and that there had been a wreck.

"While I was trying to free the children and myself there came an awful explosion. It was like a clap of thunder. The ground seemed to rock and the car was lifted clear off the track, and when it came down remained standing slightly aslant. The explosion lifted the obstructing upper berth clear from its frame and I felt that we were free. I heard from every part of the car the agonized cries of women and men and then there came darkness and an awful hush.

A Stranger's Timely Aid.

"Out of the silence and the darkness I heard the strong and calm voice of a man. 'Madame,' the voice said, 'our train has been wrecked, and we must hurry if our lives are to be saved. I noticed that you had two children. You cannot manage them both; let me help you with one. I have a little fellow at home myself.'

"The stranger took Jerome, and I kept Lawrence. Then he helped me and the children out of the window at our berth which had been broken by the force of the explosion. He let the boys out first. I had scarcely got out when there came another explosion, accompanied by a sheet of flame that set fire to the wrecked cars. A burning piece of timber hit me in the forehead, and I fell to the ground.

"How long I remained unconscious I do not know, but it could not have been very long. When I regained my senses I found myself on the brink of a little stream. Both I and my boys were in our night clothes, and my robe was on fire. I rolled to and fro on the cool sand of the beach to put out the fire and soothe the pain I suffered. My boys were at my side crying from pain and trembling with the chill of the night. The whole landscape was lit up.

"There was a ruddy glow over the river. As I looked up I saw the entire string of cars burning on the track high above my head, while the screams of the wounded and the shouted directions of the rescuers filled the night with horrible sounds.

"Presently a man came down the embankment, accompanied by women bearing blankets. From the voice I recognized him as the stranger who had helped us out of the car window. The little ones and I were wrapped in blankets, after the women had ascertained that we had not suffered any serious injury, and we were taken to a hotel, where we spent the night.

"This morning the stranger came to inquire how I was. This was the first time I could look into his eyes and thank him for what he had done for me and the children. I pleaded with him to tell me who he was. 'I would like to know the name of the man whom I must remember through all the years to come as the one who saved my children's life and my own,' I said. He replied: 'It is nothing. I only did my duty, and less no man should do.' Then he shook me by the hand and left, after he had ascertained that I had the means to return home. I could not learn the man's name, but I know that he was good and noble and risked his own life for ours."

Mrs. Picker has an ugly scar on her forehead, and was burned and bruised about her body. She limped painfully as she left her car, and went up the platform leaning on the arm of her husband, who, with their eldest son, Harold, was on hand to meet them.

Tears and smiles followed close upon each other as Harold put into his mother's arms a bouquet of pansies from himself and a large bunch of roses and carnations from his father.

Escaped Through a Window.

Charles Rosenstock, a traveling salesman of 217 East One Hundred and Fifteenth Street, came in on the Manhattan Limited at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Two brothers and a sister were at the station to meet him. He had suffered severely from shock, and had bruises on his chest and on the left side of his body, and was burned on his feet and legs. He was hurled from his berth, and escaped through a window clad only in his nightrobe, which was torn into shreds.

"I ran along the track for some distance," said he, "when a second explosion occurred. It lifted me off my feet and blew me a hundred feet through the air. I went clear over the embankment, and landed on the edge of the river. There were other men and women there before me, and more came sailing through the air after me. The flames of the exploding dynamite were so noxious that I had to throw myself into the river to escape being suffocated.

"When I got out of the water a man came and handed me a night gown, which I put on. He led me to the top of the embankment. There we met a poor Italian woman. She gave me a pair of shoes. My feet were sore and bleeding and full of splinters. I was taken to a near-by fire station, where I was placed on a cot and was then taken to the Harrisburg Hospital, where my chest was dressed and my other injuries attended to.

"At the hospital I saw sights so gruesome that they beggar description. Men and women bleeding and badly burned were brought in almost every minute and in all sorts of conveyances. I have been in other wrecks, but I have never witnessed anything like this. At the hospital I met a brother Mason, Israel S. Buser of 230 Main Street, Steelton. He took me in a carriage to his home, six miles away. He gave me a complete new outfit of clothing and money enough to get home. On the train I met a man who advanced $10 and I got a berth in a sleeper.

Lone Passenger in the Smoker.

"The scenes about the wreck were awful. Everybody on the train lost everything. Only one passenger escaped with his clothing on. He was in the smoker. The smoker was not burned, it was blown over the embankment and rolled down to the river, where the lone passenger crawled out.

"In the other cars men and women could be seen hanging out of the windows, while their night clothes burned from off their backs, and the heat was so intense that no one could get near enough to rescue them or alleviate their pain.

"Too much could not be said regarding the hospitality of the Harrisburg people. Private houses were thrown open everywhere to care for the wounded. Women came out in the depth of the night bearing blankets and bed clothing and sheets and other linen to use for bandages. The rich came out to the scene in their automobiles, and then gave them up for ambulance service. Nothing that human kindness could do to help in such an emergency was left undone."

Mrs. C. H. Stowe and Mrs. H. C. Yard, reported as among the injured in the Harrisburg train wreck, and as living in Brooklyn, are mother and daughter. Mrs. Stowe is the wife of a retired stock broker, while her daughter's husband, Mr. Yard, is in the dry goods business. The Stowes recently sold their house at 132 Bay Twenty-fifth Street, Bensonhurst, and Mrs. Stowe and her daughter were on their way to Pittsburg when they were caught in the wreck. A telephone message received from them in Bensonhurst yesterday afternoon stated that they had practically escaped injury.

GRAPE-NUTS.

DOCTOR'S FOOD

For His Family and Patients.

A surgeon and physician of Reedsville, Pa., has found Grape-Nuts so nourishing and strengthening that he uses it as a supporting medium after operations. He says:

"As a physician I take great pleasure in using Grape-Nuts in my family and also recommend it to my patients where a good strengthening food is required.

"I find it particularly valuable in convalescence from run down and depressed conditions. It also does well as a supporting medium after surgical operations.

"The fact that it is pre-digested makes it an ideal food for sufferers from indigestion and dyspeptic conditions. With the high quality of the food maintained, as has always been the case, I consider it an ideal food for most all conditions." Name given by Postum Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

The Pianola

Gentlemen,

I consider the Metrostyle indispensable to the Pianola and I have indicated my interpretation of several compositions with great interest.

Sincerely yours,

I. J. Paderewski

May the 8th. 1905. New York

I consider the Metrostyle indispensable to the Pianola, and I have indicated my interpretation of several compositions with great interest.

ALTHOUGH M. Paderewski was too ill to give the concluding Recitals of his Tour, he accepted an invitation to call at Aeolian Hall on the eve of sailing for home and hear some recent compositions played by the Pianola. He spoke enthusiastically of the artistic characteristics of the instrument, and upon his return to his hotel sent the above note to the Aeolian Company, which shows that the great Polish artist has not modified his original attitude in regard to the real merit of the Pianola and its most important feature—the Metrostyle.

It is noteworthy that not only Paderewski, but practically all the other recognized authorities, have gone on record as praising the Metrostyle Pianola. It is still more noteworthy that although there are now upwards of forty different Piano-Players on the market, the Pianola is the only one which these distinguished musicians have chosen to endorse and recommend to the public as worthy of serious consideration.

Anyone who contemplates investing the substantial sum represented by a Piano-Player, surely wishes to acquire the best instrument of its type. The Pianola is the standard of its class, its popularity and sales being greater than all other Piano-Players put together. It has in the Metrostyle a feature which Paderewski describes as "indispensable" and which is not even approximated in any other instrument.

The Metrostyle Pianola, $250 and $300; purchasable on moderate monthly payments.

THRILLING INCIDENTS IN NIGHT OF TERROR

Baby Found by Frantic Mother Safe Near Burning Train.

WOMAN HAD DIRE FOREBODING

Killed by Iron Bolt That Passed Through Her Body—Passengers Escape from Blazing Cars.

Special to The New York Times.

HARRISBURG, May 11.—Many thrilling incidents occurred in connection with the train wreck this morning, and some strange and pitiful scenes were witnessed.

A tiny baby, only four months old, lying on a seat cushion, fifty feet from the wreck, calmly sucking its thumb, was found by its agonized mother and the man who had rescued her, fully half an hour after the collision. The baby, a girl, had her eyes wide open and was kicking her feet as if the flames and the noise and the excitement had been got up for her especial benefit. How she got out of the wreck and on the seat is a mystery.

The child went to sleep at her mother's breast shortly after the express left Lancaster. The mother, tired and sleepy, wrapped the little one in a shawl and laid her upon one of the package racks that are fixed at intervals in the side of the day coaches. The baby was sleeping soundly and soon the mother dozed off. Suddenly there was a terrific explosion, a rattle and crash of glass, grinding timbers, and the hissing of escaping steam.

All was dark in this car, and the mother, thrown from the seat, fled wildly down the aisle. She was caught in the rush of other passengers in the day coach, and before she knew what was happening she was hurled from the car, and fell along the rails. Her face was scratch by cinders and stones.

J. M. Bamford of Harrisburg, who lives not far from where the wreck occurred, found the woman rushing about and crying for her baby.

"Oh, find my baby for me; find her. You must find her or I will go crazy," wailed the woman, grasping Mr. Bamford by the sleeve of his coat, and fairly dragging him over the tracks toward the burning wreckage.

Mr. Bamford spoke encouragingly to the woman as he led her around the wreck and down the embankment away from the sparks and the heat of the flames, which lighted the ground for yards around. Men and women, most of them nearly nude, could be seen on all sides, either fleeing from the burning cars or crawling out of windows or from under the wreckage, but to these sights she was blind, nor did she heed the awful shrieks of the victims held fast in the blazing debris.

At the foot of the steep embankment, close to the river's edge, the woman broke from his grasp, ran swiftly toward what looked to be a bundle, and there was her baby. Mr. Bamford led the mother further down the shore and turned her over to a policeman.

Escape of Father and Daughter.

Lloyd E. Burt, yardmaster of the Pennsylvania freight yards at New Brunswick, was in the wreck with his daughter. He said that when the first crash came he braced himself for the worst and was then thrown to the floor by an explosion which wrenched the car from end to end. Immediately flames burst out everywhere. Before he could recover himself there came another explosion, hurling him to the ceiling. He again fell to the floor while the dynamite demolished the car.

Everything was in wild confusion, for the more the cars bumped along the more dynamite was exploded. The porter shouted to those inside to come out, and Mr. Burt rushed to the door near him, only to find it jammed. The outer door had been opened by the porter preparatory to the stop at Harrisburg, which was then about two miles away, and to this fact Mr. Burt attributes his deliverance. Arrived on the platform with his daughter a second explosion threw them off the car. Then they made for the city in their night clothes. Mr. Burt was barefooted and his daughter was without shoes.

When they reached the city they were taken to the hospital and clothes and medical attention were given to them. A heavy Masonic ring Mr. Burt wore was bent nearly double and the seal torn out by the explosion. He and his daughter lost everything they possessed.

O. C. Jordan of Lorain, Ohio, got out with his suit case, and after dragging a half dozen others from the burning cars, distributed the contents of his satchel among them. Mr. Jordan said:

"I owe my life to the fact that I was able to secure a lower berth at Philadelphia. I decided to sit up all night, and had fallen into slumber when the train reached Middletown. A terrific crash and an immediate explosion awakened me, and I found myself turning over and over as my coach turned a complete somersault.

His Hand in a Trap.

"When we came to a stop I saw above me an open window and made an attempt to gain it. I found my hand caught in a suit case handle, and while trying to extricate it a second terrific explosion occurred, and the door at the end of the car was burst open. Dragging the suit case, from which I was unable to loosen my hold, I crawled over bodies and wreckage through to the open door.

"Then I returned to the work of rescue. Time after time the flames forced me back, but I returned until the heat became so intense that to have ventured near the wreck would have meant suffocation.

"Half naked women stood shivering about, and the least wounded of the men had not the wherewith to clothe themselves. So I distributed all of my clothing, of which I had a full suit case, among them.

"My only injury is a blood blister on the little finger of right hand."

Paul Jinkee of Pittsburg said he was awake when the crash came. "I had just given my shoes to the porter for shining," said he. "The next instant I was jammed into the forward end of the car. I recollect several seconds seemingly elapsed between the collision and the heavy explosion. The collision itself did no damage to the sleeping cars. All would have been well had it not been for the explosion.

"I heard two women scream 'Save me!' and the flash followed. The floor was driven into the car. Trying to get out of the car I was everywhere impeded by the loose curtains of the berths. I don't know how I reached the ground. I know I didn't get out of the door or a window, but just found myself on the rails."

Newspaper Man's Experience.

"The first intimation I had of the wreck," said John B. Reynolds of Pittsburg, a newspaper man who was going home from New York, and escaped with slight injuries, "was when I heard an awful crash and was thrown out into the aisle of the car. I was dazed for a little time, and only realized my position and what had happened when I felt a woman grabbing me and exclaiming, 'For God's sake help me.' I pushed her out of the window, and a fellow-passenger handed out a child which belonged to her. He then left the train and called to me to jump through the window.

"Just then there was a terrific explosion. As I dropped to the ground a missile struck and knocked me down. I don't know how long I lay there, but when I recovered my senses I crawled across the tracks under a freight train and rolled down the embankment on the other side. I was in my night clothes, and all my other clothing and belongings were lost.

"The mill hands working near the scene of the accident were quick to rescue, as the cries of the injured and [illegible] of fire to their homes in that locality, and fitted some of them out with shoes and clothing."

Harvey Feldman and wife of Franklin, Penn., were in the drawing room of one of the sleepers on their way home from New York.

"We were sleeping soundly," said Mr. Feldman, "when there was a slight explosion that partly awoke us. This was followed by the most awful roar I ever heard, and in an instant we were dashed against the side of the car. We groped around in the dark and finally got out of the window, losing everything. We made our way to a place of safety, but we had to walk over the sharp cinders, and our bare feet were badly cut. Mrs. Feldman was severely cut back of the ear, and suffered much from shock, and I am wounded in the left breast.

Mr. and Mrs. Tindel's Escape.

Senator P. C. Knox's daughter, Mrs. Tindel of Pittsburg, and her husband were slightly injured by flying glass. They walked from the scene of the wreck to Steelton, where they called up Gov. Pennypacker by telephone and explained their condition. The Governor immediately dispatched his private secretary, Bromley Wharton, to their aid.

Mr. Wharton was unable to find any conveyance to carry him to Steelton, and procured a horse and started to ride. On his way he met a cabman, who loaned him his cab, and Mr. and Mrs. Tindel were taken to the Executive Mansion, where they were furnished with clothing and medical attention.

Among those who were rescued with slight injuries was Miss Brown, daughter of Congressman Brown of Pittsburg, and her companion, a Miss Woodworth of Philadelphia. They lost all of their baggage. By good fortune they succeeded in escaping from the Pullman car window and were wandering around the fields when they were met by J. M. Lamberton of Harrisburg, a personal friend, who had been on the same train.

Mr. Lamberton was unable to get a berth and was traveling to Harrisburg in a day coach. He was probably the only one to escape from the coach without injury. He took the young women to his home.

Among those who got out without injury were Mrs. Albert J. Barr, wife of the editor of The Pittsburg Post, and her two daughters, who were on their way to Pittsburg. They were taken to the hospital, where one of the attending physicians gave them attention and then sent them to his home.

Mrs. R. M. Huselton and daughter of Pittsburg escaped without serious injury, although Miss Huselton received a painful wound on the arm. They were dragged from a Pullman window just before the flames reached them.

Fireman Dickey's Luck.

Robert Dickey of 3,304 Melon Street, Philadelphia, fireman of the wrecked train, thinks he is the luckiest man alive to-night, even if he has a big hole in his back and faces several weeks in the hospital. Dickey is the only man alive who saw all the preliminaries to the catastrophe, and he will be an important witness before the Coroner. Lying on his cot in the hospital, suffering excruciating pain, but with a smile at the thought that he was counted among the living, he told his story:

"We make our fast time before we strike Harrisburg, you know," he began, "and were traveling along at sixty miles an hour. Just as we rounded the curve above Steelton we saw the freight train ahead of us on the eastbound track. Then, as we were almost abreast of it, both Thomas and myself saw that there was something wrong with the freight.

"We saw that the freight train had buckled, owing to the failure of the air hose to work properly, and some of the cars began to topple over toward our track. Thomas, the engineer, knew that the only chance of safety was to get by before any of the cars struck ours. He let the engine out another notch, and she sped by the tilting cars. The baggage, the smoker, and the day coach also passed, but the car loaded with dynamite had toppled over far enough to strike the first Pullman.

"That's all I know. When I woke up I was lying on the grass by the river bank with an awful pain in my back."

Iron Bolt Pierced Her Body.

One of the saddest incidents in connection with the disaster was the death of Mrs. Robert P. Dougherty of 1,207 South Twenty-eighth Street, Philadelphia. Mr. and Mrs. Dougherty and their twelve-year-old son were on their way to Cleveland. They were in the last Pullman car, and were awakened by the first explosion.

Instantly they made their way out of the car, and were proceeding toward the Susquehanna River, along the bank of which the Pennsylvania runs, when there was a second explosion. An iron bolt passed through Mrs. Dougherty's body. Her husband and son were injured by flying debris. Mrs. Dougherty, members of the family say, had started on the trip with reluctance and a foreboding that some ill awaited her or those with her. Her husband is an engineer on the Pennsylvania, her eldest son, Robert P., Jr., is an electrician for the company, and her second son, William, is in the General Passenger Agent's office.

Mrs. Dougherty had not been on a journey of any length since her honeymoon, when she went to New York. She had consented to visit Cleveland after much pleading upon the part of her husband and largely for the sake of her son whose desire to travel overcame her fear of railroads.

Policeman's Work of Rescue.

H. C. Weirich, a policeman, was perhaps the first person to reach the scene of the wreck. He began the work of rescue within five minutes after the explosion occurred and the trains caught fire.

"I was standing near the Paxtang powder house, on Cedar Street, when the first explosion occurred," said Weirich. "A second explosion followed instantly. Glass crashed all around me. It was broken by the concussion. As soon as I got a lay of the land I ran down to the tracks and there I saw a great flame.

"I ran around the freight train, which had been split by the explosion, and the moment I did so I had a full view of the passenger train. My impression is that all the passenger cars with the exception of one were standing on the track, and every one of them was ablaze. Then I heard screams and groans, and saw men and women, most of them nearly naked, crawling out of windows and from under the cars. I ran to them, and the first person I met was a woman. She was screaming and her night clothing was on fire.

"From that time on I was so busy that I do not really know what happened. It seemed that men and women would never stop coming from the wreck. I helped several crawl out of windows, but finally the flames drove us all away. By that time two patrol wagons and some firemen had arrived.

"We loaded sixteen injured persons in the first wagon and then got orders to help the firemen. We thought that if we could drown out the fire many persons who were caught in the cars could be saved from being burned to death. The flames proved too hot, however, and we were driven back. The ties took fire and the wind from the river drove the sparks in the direction of the freight cars which had escaped. Some one yelled that there was another car of dynamite in the train, and everybody scattered.

"Only by the light of the flames could we see to work, and every once in a while we could hear some unfortunate pinned in a burning car begging to be killed. It was awful, especially when you think that there was plenty of men there to take up the work of rescue, but were prevented from getting near the train by the intense heat. Then, too, many were afraid that there was more dynamite about."

KAISER SENDS GREETING TO RAILWAY CONGRESS

Declares International Traffic Aids Cause of Peace.

STERNBURG PRAISES AMERICA

Says It Is Doing Much to Draw the World More Closely Together—Cortelyou Speaks at Banquet.

WASHINGTON, May 11.—At the banquet given to-night at the New Willard by American railways to the delegates to the International Railway Congress, the following cablegram from Emperor William was read by Baron Speck von Sternburg, the German Ambassador:

"I send my greetings to the International Railroad Congress, in which for the first time German delegates are participating. May the personal exchange of ideas among the most prominent railroad men of the world, assembled in Washington, be of lasting benefit to international traffic, the prosperous development of which is the most effective way of fostering mutual understanding and the peaceful bringing together of nations."

The following cablegram was sent in reply to the Emperor's message:

"The International Railway Congress thanks his Imperial Majesty, the Kaiser, for his courteous message and wishes him long life and happiness."

In the course of a speech at the banquet the German Ambassador said:

"It has been frequently emphasized by the leaders of the nations that the chief thing the world needs is to have its peoples know each other. This year stands out in history because in no previous year has any country accomplished as much as the United States in drawing the world more closely together.

"The railroads and their managers and officials are the real bearers of our civilization. They have just united men who represent the highest intellect of their respective countries. I am sure the work they have accomplished here will increase international welfare and prosperity, stimulate industry, and spread the gospel so tersely summarized by the President of the United States in the phrase 'the square deal.'"

Postmaster General Cortelyou discussed the relation of the postal service to the problem of transportation. He said the relations between the Government and the railway companies carrying the mails were both intimate and dependent. The roads co-operated in providing the quick mail service, which was more important to the people than rapid travel.

Mr. Cortelyou spoke of the benefits to be derived from the Congress both by Americans and the foreign delegates. Of the America of to-day he said:

"You will find it alert and progressive, but you will also find it generous and open-hearted. It desires nothing to which it is not rightfully entitled. In all lines of commercial activity it seeks the best methods and the best appliances. It will give freely of its experience in the great problem of railway transportation and it will gratefully acknowledge its indebtedness to you for the suggestion and advice which in this international congress, you may be able to give."

FIRST SKYSCRAPER SOLD.

$1,500,000 for Tower Building and Adjoining Two, It Is Said.

The Tower Building, at 50 Broadway, according to reports current in real estate circles yesterday, has been sold, together with the two buildings adjoining it on the south, owned by the New York Improved Real Estate Company. The price paid for the combined properties is said to be about $1,500,000.

The identity of the buyer has not been disclosed, and neither John N. Stearns, the owner of the Tower Building, nor the officers of the New York Improved Real Estate Company would discuss yesterday the reported sale of their holdings.

The Tower Building, which was erected in 1888, was the first structure in which the entire weight of walls and floors was supported by a steel skeleton, and seven or eight years ago a tablet reciting this fact was placed on the building just to the left of the Broadway entrance. The architect, Bradford L. Gilbert, was confronted with the problem of planning an eleven-story building on a lot only 21 feet wide, without using up most of that space with walls of heavy masonry, and the pioneer skyscraper was the result.

The Tower Building and its two neighbors cover a plot fronting 81.9 feet on Broadway and extending through 167.6 feet to New Street, where the frontage is 68 feet. It is understood that the site will be improved with a twenty-story building. The properties adjoin on the south the building known as 42 Boardway and on the north Exchange Court, owned by the Astors.

Distinctive Suits for Men
At Twenty Dollars

A man organizes his business to produce a certain thing. The product can be no better than the organization.

The average clothing shop depends upon wholesale manufacturers for its suits. One makes those at twenty dollars—another provides those at thirty-five—each according to his organization. Their twenty dollar suits are tailored by twenty dollar tailors. You dare not expect much of them, else why would they be in that class? At that point our shop differs radically and vitally. Every tailorman that spends his efforts in our shops has it within himself to tailor the garments which we present at forty dollars. The same craftsmen produce those at twenty. They know no distinction. They have but one guide—the Saks Standard.

Perhaps that will demonstrate to your reason why our suits at twenty dollars are invested with the character, the distinctiveness and the finer phases of the tailorman's craft—why they are in the class with those for which most shops ask about one-third more. Ready-for-service, we present:

Two Straight Edge Single Breasted Sack Models.
Three Round Edge Single Breasted Sack Models.
Three Double Breasted Sack Models.

Fashioned of serge, worsted, cheviot, tweed and cassimere in hundreds of the season's newest shades and patterns.

PORT ARTHUR IN MINIATURE.

Bay, Ships, Mountains, and Guns at Luna Park.

After having considered a dozen different spectacles to occupy the ten-acre inclosure in which the Durbar was presented last season, Thompson & Dundy have at last decided on "The Fall of Port Arthur." To-day 600 men are to be turned into the Durbar inclosure to transform it according to the plans of the inventors of the naval spectacle into a reproduction of the Far Eastern bay.

A lake, covering eight acres, mountains on which are real batteries, and thirty-six warships, including models of the United States Asiatic Squadron, and all the Russian men-of-war which were engaged in the fighting at Port Arthur and the Japanese ships will be seen. The management expects that before three Sundays pass the spectacle will be ready.

Fond Adventures

Since the publication of The Forest Lovers Maurice Hewlett has written nothing so palpitating with the full and splendid life of the Middle Ages as these four tales. Mr. Hewlett has a magic mastery over the field of mediæval romance. His rich, sensuous impressions are tinged with poetic feeling. They are a revelation of the varied beauties possible in the telling of romantic tales.

MAURICE HEWLETT'S love stories

The Marriage of William Ashe

"The most noteworthy heroine of English fiction since 'Becky Sharp,'" declares Life in praise of Lady Kitty in Mrs. Ward's great novel. It is a story that will endure—a masterpiece of modern English fiction. There is a breadth of sympathy, a delicacy of touch in the great moments of abandonment, a realness which makes the book not so much a picture of life as life itself.

TAMMANY WOULD HEAR FROM MURPHY ON GAS

Leader Due Back To-day—Rank and File Restive.

FOLEY IS IN THE DARK YET

Says So, Too—O'Gorman to be Re-elected Grand Sachem—Citizens' Union and McClellan.

Charles F. Murphy, the leader of Tammany Hall, is due to arrive home from Mount Clemens to-day, in order to be present at the meeting of the Tammany Society to-night to choose a Grand Sachem. His return is likely to bring forth some interesting developments with respect to the attitude of the organization on gas. Since the Tammany chieftain departed for Mount Clemens, several days ago, two of the Tammany district organizations have met and discussed the gas question in a way which, to say the least, must have been embarrassing to Mr. Murphy. It is said that the pressure being brought to bear upon other Democratic district leaders is likely to lead them to follow the example of Leaders Harburger and Lantry in calling meetings at which the opinion of the district could be expressed in the form of resolutions.

There are interesting evidences that "the lid is off" among the Tammany district organizations with relation to gas, and that the Tammany Senators who voted against the cheap gas bill will hear from other constituencies besides those of Harburger and Lantry within the next few days. Even "Tom" Foley of the Second is beginning to feel that his Senator, Riordan, made a serious mistake when he voted with the "wild-cat" Republicans to kill the gas bill. Foley admitted yesterday that there seemed to be considerable feeling among the rank and file on the gas issue.

"I certainly heard nothing from Mr. Murphy on the subject before the vote was taken on the bill," said Mr. Foley. "When any of the representatives of my district do anything in opposition to the wishes of the organization I usually hear from the Hall. But I have had no complaint about Senator Riordan's vote on gas as yet. All I know about the way Mr. Murphy is said to feel about it is what I have gathered from the newspapers."

When Leader Murphy started for Mount Clemens, Secretary Smith said he had been authorized by Mr. Murphy to say to the press that Mr. Murphy would attend to the cases of the Tammany Senators who voted against the gas bill." It is expected that Mr. Murphy will be more explicit on that subject and with respect to the gas question generally when he reaches the Wigwam to-day.

The meeting of the Tammany Society to elect a Grand Sachem promised to produce a lively contest owing to the rivalry which had sprung up between Supreme Court Justice Victor J. Dowling and Corporation Counsel John J. Delany for the place. But it was announced yesterday that in order to prevent any bad feeling in the organization, both Judge Dowling and Mr. Delany had withdrawn on the promise of Justice James A. O'Gorman to accept a re-election.

There was considerable interest manifested in Tammany circles yesterday in the declaration of John Brooks Leavitt, a member of the City Committee of the Citizens' Union, in favor of the Citizens' Union indorsing the candidacy of Mayor McClellan for re-election. It became known that as far back as last January Mr. Leavitt had introduced a resolution at a meeting of the City Committee calling for the support of Mr. McClellan. Mr. Leavitt yesterday refused to discuss the action which he took at the meeting of the Citizens' Union's City Committee, but when asked for his individual views with respect to Mayor McClellan's candidacy for re-election, said:

"I am willing to say that it is my individual opinion that it behooves the citizens of New York, without regard to party, to consider very seriously whether Mayor McClellan ought to be renominated by acclamation. I fully realize his administration is vulnerable at points, and that the Tammany tiger is like the leopard, and has not changed his spots. I believe, however, that Mayor McClellan has not always been able to avoid doing some things which he did not want to do, but he has stood for the right in a way that I never expected any Tammany nominee could or would do.

"If he were renominated by acclamation he would have a freer hand in the future, and my faith in him, begotten by his own works, is now strong enough to make me believe that he would be equal to such a situation.

"In my judgment, the non-partisan principle of the Citizens' Union requires it to recognize every good effort of a municipal administration when made by Tammany office holders, as well as by those of any other political faith."

TWO MORE GAS COMPANIES.

Concerns with the Whole State as Their Field Incorporated.

ALBANY, May 11.—Two more large stock companies incorporated to-day for the purpose of manufacturing and furnishing gas and electricity, with the whole State as their field, make a total of four such incorporations since the passage of the bill creating a State Commission to supervise the organization and operation of gas and electric companies.

By incorporating before Gov. Higgins signs this bill such companies escape the provision of the proposed law requiring the approval of the new commission and the consent of the municipalities in which they intend to operate before they can begin business.

The companies incorporated to-day are the General Public Service Corporation and the Universal Service Company, the former with a capital of $2,000,000, and the latter with a capital of $100,000. The Directors of both are Frederic H. Cowden, William C. Dreyer, and Samuel H. Gainsborg, all of New York City.

The articles of incorporation contain the names of every county, city, town and village in the State as a possible field.

CAR HITS FURNITURE VAN.

Three Men on Wagon Hurt in Third Avenue Collision.

Three persons were injured, two of them seriously, in a collision between a south-bound Third Avenue car and a furniture van at Eighty-second Street yesterday afternoon. August Peters, the driver of the van, was hurt about the face and head and suffered a possible fracture of the skull. Charles Medes, a helper on the van, received internal injuries. Both are in a serious condition. Henry Mencke, also a helper on the van, was thrown against a pillar of the elevated structure.

All three were taken to the Presbyterian Hospital.

The furniture van was on the north-bound track and was turning over to the south-bound track when it was struck by the car. The three men on the van were thrown to the pavement and the van was nearly overturned by the force of the collision. The car contained several passengers, none of whom, however, was hurt. The motorman, David Hunter, was arrested.

BLAME DEATH ON BLACK HAND

Police Think Interpreter Died from Worry Over Letter.

The death, a few days ago, of Claude De Simone, a young Italian court interpreter, was due, the Queens County police think, to worry over a "Black Hand" letter, sent to him a week ago. An investigation has been begun.

De Simone was the son of Capt. De Simone, the Astoria banker, and although his father is believed to be wealthy a collection was taken up yesterday in the Long Island City Police Court for the young widow who, with her children, were left penniless.

Two months ago an Italian was found murdered on the Shore Road at Astoria, and De Simone greatly aided the police in the search for the murderers. He did not desist until a week ago, when he received the letter signed by the "Black Hand." [illegible] he was found dead in bed.

QUESTIONS TO WINTHROP.

Equitable Financial Inquiry Continued —Several Conferences Held.

Henry Rogers Winthrop, financial manager of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, was before Superintendent Hendricks of the State Insurance Department all day yesterday answering questions about the financial transactions that are included within the scope of the State Department's investigation. Mr. Winthrop and Mr. Hendricks began their session early in the morning and it required the services of four pages to carry to the board room the books upon which the questions were based. The examination of Mr. Winthrop will, it is expected, be continued to-day. Then Mr. Hyde or Mr. Alexander may be recalled for questions supplemental to those asked on Wednesday and Tuesday evening. Second Vice President Tarbell and Senator Chauncey M. Depew are expected to be the next witnesses.

There were several conferences of the Hyde advisers yesterday, beginning with one in the early morning at Mr. Hyde's house, from which C. B. Alexander, one of the participants, went over to the Hotel Astor to consult Mr. Hendricks. Subsequently there were some long sessions in the Equitable Building downtown. While these were going on former Superintendent of Insurance Payn was seen wandering about the corridors of the Equitable offices. A report had started that he had been in conference with Mr. Hyde and his counsel. This was not subsequently denied.

HELD FOR LOAN SWINDLE.

Young Equitable Clerk and "Sam" Lobley's Brother Arrested.

Emile H. Neumar of 657 Eagle Avenue, the Bronx, who has been employed as a clerk in the offices of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, and Thomas H. Lobley, Jr., of 420 East Seventy-eighth Street, were arraigned in the Tombs Court, before Magistrate Finn, yesterday on a short affidavit charging them with being suspicious persons, and were held in $10,000 bail each for further examination.

Neumar is the clerk of the Equitable Society to whom reference has been made as the employe charged with complicity with "Sam" Lobley in the $27,000 loan swindle that Lobley negotiated through the theft of an Equitable policy deposited with the company as security for a loan of like amount to W. C. Cotton of Brookline, Mass. It will be charged that Lobley was the man who stole the policy on which the loan was made from the vaults of the society and did the "inside" work connected with the swindle. Thomas H. Lobley, Jr., who is "Sam" Lobley's brother, is held as an accomplice.

Assistant District Attorney Iselin appeared with Allen McCullough of the firm of Alexander & Green, against the prisoners. In asking that bail be fixed in $10,000 Mr. Iselin told the court that the formal complaint would set out the theft of the $27,000 obtained as a loan on the bogus policy. The two young men, neither of whom is over twenty-five, were arrested late Wednesday night by Assistant Superintendent Dougherty of the Pinkerton Detective Agency. Neumar is said to have made a complete confession to Dougherty.

PROBING HAIGHT & FREESE CO.

District Attorney's Office Inquiring with View of Taking Action.

It was learned yesterday that Assistant District Attorney Garvan is investigating certain charges against the Haight & Freese Company. The charges, it was said, involve a question whether members of the company might be indicted as common gamblers.

Mr. Garvan refused to speak about the matter yesterday, saying that his investigation had merely been begun.

BOSTON, May 11.—Eight additional intervening petitions against the Haight & Freese Company, now in the hands of a receiver, were filed in the United States Circuit Court to-day, making eleven in all. Besides these, thirty claims were filed to-day with counsel for Mrs. Charles Weiss, upon whose petition the receiver was appointed. The company issued a statement to-day promising that matters soon will be adjusted.

KIDD WILL SUIT GOES ON.

Case Is Completed Despite Rumor of Settlement.

Although it was understood that a settlement had been reached by which Grace Georgette Kidd Dickinson would inherit most of the estate left by her stepfather, George W. Kidd, the trial of Mrs. Dickinson's suit to set aside the Kidd will went on yesterday in the Supreme Court. Mrs. Dickinson lives at 853 Fifth Avenue with her mother, Mrs. Anne E. Kidd.

George W. Kidd died in December, 1901, and left a fortune estimated at more than $1,000,000. By the will Mrs. Kidd was provided for, but most of the estate was bequeathed to Kidd's relatives in France. Mrs. Dickinson then began her action to set aside the will and to gain the entire fortune under a promise said to have been made to her mother by Kidd thirty years ago.

NO RIGHT TO ELEVATE ROAD.

Justice Gaynor Says L. I. R. R. Must Pay Property Owners.

Justice William J. Gaynor of the Supreme Court handed down a decision yesterday afternoon in which he awarded $1,200, damages against the Long Island Railroad Company in favor of a property owner because of the construction of the new elevated structure along Atlantic Avenue. If Justice Gaynor's decision is upheld the railroad company will be compelled to pay large sums. Justice Gaynor holds that the railroad company had a right to only the surface of the street and that when it built an elevated structure it became liable for damages to abutting property owners, notwithstanding [illegible]

MORE CREDIT FOR CITY, BIRD S. COLER URGES

System of Finance Must Be Changed, He Declares.

100 YEARS BEHIND TIMES

For Municipal Ownership, He Tells Meeting, but Says New York Is Not Financially Prepared.

Ex-Controller Bird S. Coler last night declared before a large audience at the People's Institute Club, 318 West Fifteenth Street, that it was absolutely essential that the system of municipal finance be changed before any public improvements on a large scale could be undertaken, and that, until the change came, all talk of municipal ownership was folly. He declared himself unhesitatingly in favor of the municipal ownership of public utilities, and just as unhesitatingly against the policy of confiscation.

Judge Samuel Seabury, who also addressed the meeting, fiercely attacked the Rapid Transit Commission, which, he declared, misrepresented the people of New York and was thoroughly irresponsible. He warned his hearers that all they had left was "underground New York" and that it behooved them to safeguard it.

W. H. Reiman, one of the Directors of the club, presided and introduced Mr. Coler, announcing that the subject for the evening's discussion was, "Municipal Ownership—are we ready for it?"

"This subject," said the ex-Controller, "embodies the burning question of the day. Personally, I believe in municipal ownership and believe that we are ready for it. I realize, though, that to secure the public utilities we must buy them, just as we would a home or a suit of clothes, and to buy either a home or a suit of clothes we must have money. We must not think of confiscating anybody's property.

"Few people seem to know how much of municipal ownership we already have. The City of New York owns its water works, and nobody calls it socialism. She owns her docks, and there is no talk of socialism. She owns her rapid transit contract in a degree, and the next contract of this character let will be on terms much more advantageous to her. She has reached her limit now, and until there is some new plan of municipal finance adopted it is waste of time to talk of acquiring public utilities.

"Under the law the city can issue bonds for 10 per cent. of her taxable property. In other words, the more property the city owns the less credit she has—the less money she can borrow. In recent years every other system of finance save public finance has developed. Down in Wall Street every ounce of ingenuity on the market has been utilized in the representation of values, either real or fictitious. The municipal system of finance is one hundred years old.

"New York owns enough property today to pay her debts two and a half times over, but her assets, when it comes to borrowing money, are charged against her as liabilities. The debts of the city should be separated into two classes—one including those incurred for improvements which pay for themselves and the other those from which no revenue is derived.

"When the contract for the building of the Subway was entered into the $35,000,000 to be expended was charged against the borrowing capacity of the city before a penny was spent. That was all wrong. If water, docks, and rapid transit continue to be charged against the city we will have to stop all other improvements. The Constitution must be amended. The city must receive the same rights as are enjoyed by private corporations.

"It is argued by the uninformed that in the event of municipal ownership the employes would form such a great political power that they would control elections. As a matter of fact, nearly every motorman or conductor gets his job today as a result of political pull. I know, for I have got some dozens or tens of dozens of men places with the railroads.

"No better barometer of Government could be had than the street cars. If they were not operated economically there could be no concealing the fact. If they were run in an unsatisfactory manner, the voters would put the party responsible out of office."

Warner's Rust-Proof Corsets In Summer Weights

Summer dresses, and shirt-waists especially, are harder to keep trim at the waist-line, shapely all through, than heavier costumes are. Light Summer corsets are less likely to hold their shape than the sturdier Winter models.

The Time to Buy Sheets & Pillow-Cases

The other day we announced a drop in the prices of Ready-made Sheets and Pillow-Cases of one of the best standard muslins. The condition produced at the mills, by the drop in price, was to receive orders which they will not be able to fill for about six months; so one discount has been withdrawn, and another will probably be withdrawn in a short time, bringing the price at the mills back to practically where it was before. Fortunately our orders were ample, and prices at WANAMAKER'S will remain at the lowest point.

TRAFFIC REGULATION IN TIMES SQUARE NOW

Biggest Scheme to Keep Vehicles Moving Tried by Police.

DRIVERS EAGER TO HELP

Several Isles of Safety Now Roped Off In Big Area—Clashes of Travel Avoided.

The biggest scheme of traffic regulation ever tried in this city was put into operation yesterday morning in Times Square by Commissioner McAdoo and Acting Inspector Stephen O'Brien, with Sergeant William McCullagh in actual charge of the working of the plan. Instantly the plan was a complete success, and except for the occasional growl of some truck driver there was nothing but praise for the plan itself and the excellent way in which Sergt. McCullagh carried it out.

Commissioner McAdoo has been working on the plan for some time, and on account of the magnitude of the scheme every detail was thoroughly worked out before it was put into operation. Early yesterday morning fifteen patrolmen afoot, two mounted patrolmen, Mounted Roundsmen Denin and Polly, Mounted Sergeant John Murphy, in general charge of the traffic regulations, and Acting Inspector O'Brien and Sergeant McCullagh went to Times Square and soon had the triangles from Forty-third Street to the Hotel Astor and from Forty-fifth Street to Forty-seventh Street inclosed in the now well-known roped lines, and the scheme for regulating traffic from Forty-first Street to Forty-eighth Street, and on Broadway and Seventh Avenue, a district in which there have been more collisions and accidents to pedestrians lately than in any other part of the city, was fairly under way.

Considering the comprehensiveness of the plan and the wide area involved, as well as the radical changes, Inspector O'Brien said it was remarkable how quickly the immense amount of traffic affected fell in with the plan without a hitch. It proved, he said, that all classes of persons were beginning to see the value of the traffic plans, and were anxious to co-operate with the department in making them a success.

Unfortunately, Commissioner McAdoo said, the traffic regulations in Times Square would only extend through the day, until 6:30, when the barriers would be taken down and matters be allowed to proceed as heretofore. This was occasioned by the lack of men. As soon as this can be remedied the Commissioner said he would be only too glad to have the plan extend over the night as well as the day, as, on account of the heavy traffic all night in Broadway, the regulations were particularly needed at that time.

The first idea of the regulations was to divert traffic that was continually clashing in Broadway and Seventh Avenue. To meet this the broad plan was adopted by which no vehicular traffic, except mail wagons and those actually engaged in the delivery of goods to the stores in the district, could come north on Seventh Avenue above Forty-first Street or South on Broadway below Forty-eighth Street. In other words, a wagon coming up Seventh Avenue must turn through Forty-first Street when it reaches that street and continue north up Broadway, and a wagon going south on Broadway must turn into Seventh Avenue at Forty-eighth Street.

Considering the usual jam of traffic in and around Times Square, and the utter disregard paid to any rules, especially by some automobilists, it was remarkable to see how by a single wave of the hand from the policemen on duty the usually obstreperous drivers and chauffeurs turned as directed without clash or argument.

Vehicles can move east or west through Forty-first Street, the southernmost point to which the regulations extend. No wagon traffic at all is permissible through Forty-second Street between Broadway and Seventh Avenue, in the space in front of the Times Building, and as no traffic can go south on Broadway or north in Seventh Avenue at Forty-second Street, the space on the east side of the Building in Broadway, and on the west side of the building in Seventh Avenue are turned into isles of safety, making the sidewalk on these sides virtually as wide as the space from the building line to the car tracks.

Vehicles can go east or west through Forty-third Street, and from this point to the Hotel Astor ropes are stretched in the centre of Times Square, making the space of two blocks an isle of safety through which absolutely no vehicles are allowed to pass, and this big stretch is turned into a public sidewalk, assuring the entire safety of pedestrians. In this space also the cabs, which usually stood in front of the various restaurants, are now placed. Another roped-off isle of safety is formed from half way between Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Streets to Forty-seventh Street, where cabs are also allowed to stand.

Sergt. McCullagh, who kept gravitating continually between Forty-first and Forty-eighth Streets, looking to the details of management, said that although the scheme of regulation was the largest yet attempted, it was also the most successful.

"When enough men are provided so that the regulations can be continued day and night," said the Sergeant, "conditions in Times Square will have become ideal."

ARREST FOR BUCHANAN STEAL

Colmey, Said to Have Been Summerfield's Confederate, in Paris.

Charles Colmey, who said he was a lawyer, living in Troy, N. Y., was arrested yesterday in that city and brought to New York by Detective Sergeant McConville on a warrant charging him with complicity in the swindling of C. P. Buchanan, a carpet merchant, whose factory is at 35 Carroll Street, Brooklyn, in Paris, France, on Nov. 9, 1903, out of $40,000.

Colmey, according to the police, has a record, his picture, they say, being in the Rogues' Gallery, where it bears the names of Charles and "Kid" Murray. He was indicted some months ago, say the police, with "Larry" Summerfield, who is serving a term in Sing Sing, and Ewing Clark in connection with the Buchanan swindle, which consisted of the sale of $40,000 in stock of the "Horse Shoe Copper Mining Company."

WOMAN GAGGED AND ROBBED.

Mrs. Morse Says Former Boarder Attacked Her.

Michael Roach of 128 West One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Street was arrested last night by detectives of the East One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street Station and locked up on charges of assault and larceny.

Until two weeks ago Roach boarded with a Mrs. Morse at 1,835 Madison Avenue. He left, but returned yesterday afternoon and again engaged his room. He handed to Mrs. Morse a $10 bill. Mrs. Morse gave to him $5 change out of a roll of bills which she exhibited in his presence.

Roach left, but presently returned and entered Mrs. Morse's room. She says he seized her and bound a towel around her face.

Mrs. Morse says Roach took a pocketbook containing $19 and left the house.

NEW SEABOARD PLAN.

To Satisfy Baltimore Stockholders—Holding Company Projected.

The Reorganization Committee of the Seaboard Air Line met here yesterday and decided to modify the reorganization plan in such a manner as to make it acceptable to the Baltimore stockholders' committee, who had objected to it. A statement issued by Samuel Untermyer, counsel for the committee, says that under the plan heretofore proposed 85 per cent. of each class of stock had been deposited, but the remaining stockholders refused to assent to this idea, and as it would have been necessary to acquire the stock through lengthy litigation in the Southern States, the Reorganization Committee arranged, at the request of a majority of the stock, that a holding company should be formed on substantially the lines of the original consolidation.

This holding company, it is announced, will have the same amount of capital as was provided for the Consolidated Company, divided into the same classes of securities which will be issued on substantially the same terms. With the money to be realized from the sale of the first preferred stock of the holding company it will buy 5 per cent. mortgage bonds of the railway company, thus supplying the latter with the money it needs.

GOT THE WRONG LAVIN.

Detective Deduction—Police Court Absurdity—Thief Still at Large.

The apartments of John Dorman of 1045 Seventeenth Street, Philadelphia, were broken into recently and $400 stolen therefrom. The Quaker City police suspected one Patrick Lavin of that town, and learned that he had come to New York. Lavin, it appears, has a sister, Mamie Lavin. After some clever sleuthing, local detectives found a Mamie Lavin working in a house in West Seventy-second Street. Did she have a brother Patrick? She did. The sleuths exchanged congratulatory winks. Was he ever in Philadelphia? Sure; he had visited relatives there. The sleuths patted each other on the back.

"Do you know where he is stopping now?" asked one, craftily.

"Yes, at 5,618 Third Avenue, Brooklyn," answered the girl readily.

The Brooklyn Central Office was called up, and two of Capt. Harkins's men were sent to the Third Avenue house. They found a man there calmly eating corned beef and cabbage.

"Are you Patrick Lavin?" asked they.

"I am," responded the man. "What of it?"

"You're wanted for that Dorman affair in Philadelphia."

"And what the devil may the Dorman affair be?"

The detectives merely laughed.

"You're a smooth one, Patrick," said they, as they were taking him to headquarters.

A telegram was sent to Dorman to come to Brooklyn. Yesterday he took a look at Patrick Lavin in the Adams Street Court.

"That's not the man," said he, quickly. "I know the other fellow. You've pinched the wrong chap."

"I think so myself," said Lavin.

Lavin, who works as a fireman on the Thirty-ninth Street Ferry, was honorably discharged, with apologies.

FOUND DEAD ON GOLF LINKS.

Bullet Wound in Head of Unknown at Glendale, L. I.

GLENDALE, L. I., May 11.—The body of a young man who has not yet been identified was found this morning on the golf links in Forest Park, on the Dry Harbor Road, Glendale. A revolver lay beside the body and an examination showed a bullet wound in the man's head just above the right ear.

The dead man was about twenty-five years old, 5 feet 7½ inches in height, and weighed about 135 pounds. He was light complexioned, smooth shaven, and had brown hair and hazel eyes. His clothing was marked "D. X., 45," "L. R.," and "E. X., 414." A laundry ticket in one of the pockets was stamped "C. A. Canavelli, 480 Sumner Avenue, Brooklyn," and bore the name "Eddy."

The laundry ticket marked "Eddy," which was found on the dead man, was thought at the National Laundry, 480 Sumner Avenue, Brooklyn, to be one issued to Charles T. Eddy of 106 Decatur Street, that borough. Mr. Eddy, however, is alive and well. He said last night that he frequently plays on the Glendale links, and recalled that while he was there a few days ago he threw away an old laundry ticket which he found in his pockets.

POOL TO ASK M'ADOO TO INVESTIGATE COURT

Magistrate Scores Sergt. Martin O'Connell.

TELLS STORY OF HOLD-UP

Prisoner, He Heard, Forced to Give Up $400—Says Court Should Be Thoroughly Cleaned Out.

Magistrate Pool said in the Yorkville Court yesterday that he is to appeal to Police Commissioner McAdoo in the matter of the conduct of the affairs of the court by Sergt. Martin O'Connell, in charge of the court squad.

"This court house," said the Magistrate, "ought to be cleaned out from top to bottom."

"I heard of a story only recently," he continued, "from Miss Alice Smith, who said that a prisoner was held up in this court room by a policeman and a lawyer and made to give up $400. Miss Smith told me she had made the lawyer and the policeman return the money to the prisoner."

The Magistrate's announcement grew out of the arraignment by Sergt. O'Connell, on a charge of disorderly conduct, of Joseph Caggiano, a bootblack, who has been about the court house for sixteen years. Sergt. O'Connell said that he had found the bootblack sitting in the court room in his shirt sleeves, and that when he told him to get out he refused.

James Nugent, a lawyer practicing in the court, said that the bootblack had interfered with his clients, and had tried to "steer" for Isaac Frauenthal, another lawyer in the court. Chief Clerk Kennelly interrupted and said that the bootblack was simply a scapegoat for the Sergeant.

"This bootblack and Frauenthal and the Sergeant understood each other once upon a time," said Clerk Kennelly. "I propose to bring this matter before Commissioner McAdoo at once. I know the bottom of all this, and I intended to call the attention of the Commissioner to it anyway if this affair had not happened."

At this juncture Magistrate Pool made his remarks in regard to the story he said that Miss Smith, the probation officer of the court, had told him. Nevertheless, he accepted the charge preferred by O'Connell and committed the prisoner to the court jail for examination in default of $1,000 bail, an unusual amount when the complaint is one of disorderly conduct. Later when he had been told more of the circumstances of the case he reduced the bail to the sum of $200 and accepted a bond for that amount in which the prisoner was released.

Miss Smith, when questioned about the story Magistrate Pool had repeated, would not discuss it. Chief Clerk Kennelly said that if necessary he would have Miss Smith called as a witness.

DUNNE REBUFFS UNIONS; WON'T CALL OFF POLICE

Tells Strikers He Is Personally Responsible for Action.

WOMEN PUT OUT IN RAIN

Cabmen Won't Drive Up to Stores—Union Man Refuses to Answer at Inquiry.

CHICAGO, May 11.—A joint committee representing the unions received a rebuff at the hands of Mayor Dunne this afternoon. The committee waited on him with a request that an order permitting policemen to ride on the wagons of the firms, against which the teamsters are on strike be countermanded on the ground that the police were being used in a manner to discriminate against the strikers.

The Mayor told the committee that he had issued the order enabling the police to ride on the wagons, that he would be personally responsible for the effect of that order and, in so many words, said that he did not consider the police were exceeding their rights or powers at all. He declared everything in the situation warranted the police riding on the wagons.

Cabmen to-day added a new annoyance to the list of discomforts suffered by women as a result of the strike. While torrents of rain deluged the streets women passengers, in order to reach the larger retail stores, were forced to leave hired conveyances in some cases a block away. At Marshall Field's six energetic and rain proof pickets warned all union drivers not to approach the carriage entrance. The carriages were stopped at the curb before an adjoining building and the women occupants, many without umbrellas waded ankle deep through pools and under beating rain.

A break in the ranks of the strikers to-day is alleged to have occurred in a refusal of the hay and feed drivers to observe the boycott. Deliveries are being made by union drivers to all the firms against which the strike prevails.

One of the important features of the strike to-day was the examination of witnesses before Master in Chancery Sherman, who is taking testimony relative to the alleged violation of the Federal injunction granted in favor of the Employers' Association and of the seven express companies.

Adolph Pfeil, for eleven years an employe of the United States Express Company, but now a striker, refused to answer questions on the ground that he might incriminate himself. The queries put to him by the attorney for the Employers' Association covered the grounds of the cause of the strike, and whether the officers of his union ordered or advised him to strike. To all of these questions Attorney Le Bosky, for the defendants, made strenuous objections, with the result that there occurred between him and Attorney Mayer, acting for the plaintiffs, numerous altercations.

The wrangles were finally terminated by the statement of the Master that the matter would be certified to the Federal Court as to whether the witness had proper grounds on which to base his refusal to answer questions.

Edward Buckley, a striking union driver, told of being ordered by officials of his union to put his wagon in the barns. When asked why he did not continue at work he replied:

"Because I did not want to be killed."

Mayor Dunne's commission to investigate the strike issued a statement to-day that the commission had decided to suspend until further notice all sessions because of lack of power to compel the attendance of witnesses.

Edward Jasper, who was struck on the head with a stone during a riot, May 5, died at the County Hospital to-day.

CHURCH CONFERENCE NOV. 15.

Plans for Federation of Protestants Will Be Discussed.

Members of the Executive Committee and the Committee of Arrangements for the Inter-Church Conference on Federation met last night at the Hotel Savoy, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street. They enthusiastically approved plans for a meeting of the representatives of the various Protestant churches of the United States, to be held at Carnegie Hall next November. The conference, looking to a federation, will be held from Nov. 15 until Nov. 20. The conference is to be the largest in the history of the Protestant Church in America. Delegates from the various denominations will represent 17,000,000 people.

The Rev. Dr. W. H. Roberts presided at last night's meeting. The Rev. Dr. E. B. Sandford, Secretary of the conference, made a most hopeful address in which he announced that the Episcopalian Church would send representatives to the November conference headed by Bishop Greer, and that every Protestant denomination would be present.

Addresses were made by ministers representing various denominations, all of them for conciliation in differences of religious beliefs, and every one hopeful that there is about to be a religious revival in the United States that will surpass any other the country has ever experienced. Among those who are acting on the Committee of Arrangements are:

Morris K. Jesup, Willis James, John S. Huyler, Charles M. Pratt, John E. Parsons, Warner Van Norden, Charles E. Hughes, the Rev. Drs. Robert S. MacArthur, Ernest M. Stires, Donald Sage Mackay, J. Ross Stevenson, William R. Richards, Charles H. Goodell, Henry A. Stimson, Charles E. Jefferson, Wallace McMullen, Henry Mottet, Howard Duffield, Charles L. Thompson, Reese F. Alsop, Frank Mason North, George U. Wenner, and E. S. Tippie.

BIBLE SOCIETY'S BUSY YEAR.

Report Shows Special Activity in Foreign Fields.

The Board of Managers' report, presented at the annual meeting of the Bible Society yesterday, showed that 1,631,096 Bibles or portions of Scripture had been issued the past year, of which 873,075 were printed in Oriental languages and put out from foreign agencies. The American Standard Revised Bible was sent out for the first time.

The list shows 614 auxiliary societies remaining, although 806 have been removed during the year. This fact is taken to indicate the need of a change in method of distribution in the domestic field.

Gains in circulation are reported in Siam, Korea, and the Philippines, while the agency in Japan has brought the Bible to the soldiers and sailors in the hospitals. In Turkey and Mexico the work is still difficult because of opposition. Receipts from all sources for the year were $851,282.96. The disbursements were $810,018.36, of which $183,952.10 was sent to the foreign agencies.

GUILTY OF POLICY DEALING.

Stephen O'Brien Convicted in Kings County Court.

Stephen O'Brien, who, since Monday, has been on trial in the Kings County Court, charged with dealing in policy, was convicted yesterday afternoon after the jury had considered his case for nearly two hours.

It was charged that O'Brien owned a policy shop in High Street, Brooklyn. The testimony of several witnesses showed that he had maintained the place for nearly fifteen years.

After the jury had returned its verdict, District Attorney Clarke informed the court that O'Brien had been convicted on a charge of being a common gambler in the County Court, Dec. 13, 1878, and that Judge Moore had at that time fined him $100. On April 28, 1890, Mr. Clarke said, O'Brien had been convicted in Special Sessions on a charge of interfering with a witness before the County Court. For this offense he was fined $300.

Recorder Crane remanded O'Brien until Monday, when he will be sentenced.

ROCKMEN'S STRIKE BEGINS.

As a Start 1,800 Men Are Ordered to Stop Work.

The strike committee appointed by the Rockmen and Excavators' Union two weeks ago to order a strike against the 130 members of the Contractors' Protective Association for a new wage scale and recognition of the union began work yesterday.

Frank De Mott, Secretary of the union, reported last night that strikes involving 1,800 men to start with had been ordered against the following firms, to go into effect to-day.

Canavan Brothers, 518 West Fifty-sixth Street; Patrick Reddy, Lenox Avenue and One Hundred and Eleventh Street; Joseph Gallick, 402 East Eighty-eighth Street, and F. V. Smith, Tiffany and One Hundred and Sixty-fifth Streets. He said that a strike had also been ordered against James Duffy, 533 West Twenty-fourth Street, but the strike order in his yard had been rescinded, as he had asked for a conference.

A list of other employers will be prepared to-day, and more men are to be ordered out on Monday. There are 26,000 men in the union.

"The men do not know what they want," said a member of the firm of Canavan Brothers last night. "They are getting more wages than they ask, and the real demand is recognition of the union. This the employers cannot concede. We have men in our employ for ten years who are well paid and satisfied, and if they strike they will be making the mistake of their lives."

TAG ALL THE CHILDREN.

Somebody Writes an Ordinance and Sends It to Alderman Sickles.

Alderman Daniel E. Sickles received by mail yesterday a copy of a proposed ordinance which proposes that all children, male or female, under fifteen years of age shall hereafter be tagged, so that when they are lost they can be identified easily and returned to their parents or guardians.

Furthermore, the ordinance would make it the duty of the Police Department to make an examination of the clothing of children picked up in the street. If the children have the label required by the proposed ordinance they will be sent home; if not, the guardians who did not obey the label law will be fined $10—that is, if the police without the label glue can discover who the guardians are.

No section of the proposed ordinance would impose a fine for the use of a false name. Reuben Jones can in an emergency demand all the courtesy due to a Rockybottom or a Sandybuilt by simply turning up his trousers and displaying his label.

Section 3, however, demands that all the inmates of juvenile and orphan asylums shall be labeled, but no provision is made for the compulsory labeling of the Tenderloin infirm of a Saturday night.

The Alderman is not quite sure whether or not it is a good proposal, but he is decided that, in view of the number of children in the city needing labeling, either the tag business would get a boom or the city would reap a harvest in fines.

OLD SINGER A SUICIDE.

Wallace MacCreery Was Formerly Comic Opera Tenor.

An elderly man, who left a note giving his name as "Wallace MacCreery, opera singer," jumped from the forward deck of the ferryboat Newburg of the West Shore Line, plying between West Forty-second Street and Weehawken, as she was going toward the Jersey shore early yesterday morning. He was not seen again

When the Newburg was a few hundred yards out the man asked George Friesman of 311 West Twenty-first Street how long it took to get to Weehawken. He was told, and began to write busily in a notebook. He tore out the leaf, put it in his gray soft hat, and handed the hat to another passenger. He walked swiftly to the forward deck and before any one could stop him had plunged overboard. The note read as follows:

My name is Wallace MacCreery, opera singer. I could not stand the battle against life any longer. Mr. Hammerstein of Fields's Theatre promised me a position as doorkeeper, but I go. Let my body go to the bottom.

At Fields's Theatre it was learned that MacCreery was fifty-three years old, and at one time sang Ralph Rackstraw in "Pinafore" with the Duff Opera Company. He had also been a member of the Stetson Opera Company and of Maurice Grau's Opera Company.

Mr. Hammerstein said that last Winter MacCreery had applied to him for employment, but at that time there was no vacancy.

CAR HITS ACCORDION PLAYER.

Crowley Badly Hurt—Bowery Crowd Blocks Traffic.

Great excitement was created last night at the corner of Division Street and Chatham Square by a crowd of a thousand persons which gathered there, blocking the street and car tracks, while they waited twenty-five minutes for an ambulance from Gouverneur Hospital, summoned for John Crowley, who lay insensible after having been knocked down by a Third Avenue surface car. Ten policemen had to use their night sticks a dozen times to force back the crowds.

Crowley, who is an accordion player on the lower east and west sides, had just left Chinatown and was crossing the car tracks to the east side of the Bowery when a north-bound car struck him in the left shoulder, knocking him down. Policeman Malcolm ran up and made the motorman stop his car, and placed him under arrest, as it was thought that Crowley was dead.

Surgeon Henderson took the unconscious man to Gouverneur Hospital with his accordion on the stretcher beside him. It is feared the man's skull is fractured.

Crowley lives at 144 Cherry Street with his blind father. His wife picks rags for a living, but the pair live apart.

PUBLIC ROBBERY WORST.

Make It as Loathsome as Plague, Says Bishop at Congress.

"The Church and Public Brigandage" was the topic of discussion at the session of the Episcopal Church Congress in Association Hall, Brooklyn, last night. The speakers were the Right Rev. Alexander MacKay-Smith, Bishop Coadjutor of Pennsylvania; Dr. E. R. L. Gould of New York, the Rev. Flavel S. Luther of Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., and L. Bradford Prince of Jamaica, L. I.

Speaking of trusts and crime in the centres of population, Dr. MacKay-Smith said that in his opinion the trouble lay largely in the fact of universal suffrage in the larger cities. A property and educational qualification, he believed, was necessary for those who vote in those cities.

"We should make robbery of the public," he said, "one of the worst of all crimes, and make it as loathsome as the spreading of a plague."

Speaking of trusts, he said that he believed in a moderate tariff law, but would not defend protection run mad.

"Human greed and human selfishness," he said, "form the greatest examples in the corporation which controls the output of the mineral oil of the earth. One thousand millionaires in this land practically control the whole country. The question is a perplexing one to the Church, which should preach the duty of earnestness and widespread honesty."

Dr. Gould, in his address, said he believed partisanship was at fault for existing conditions. He gave it as his opinion that when we had disinterested leaders we would have free politics.

FOUND FIRE CONDITIONS PERILOUS IN 24 CITIES

Ignorance or Dishonesty Responsible, Says Underwriters' Board.

LOSS IN 1904 BROKE RECORD

Jersey City and Hoboken Said to be Specially Inflammable and Rates Are Raised.

Many attempts at hostile legislation were reported to the thirty-ninth annual meeting of the National Board of Fire Underwriters at the Mutual Life Building yesterday, but it was said that most of the bills had been defeated in the East. Measures to which the underwriters object are still pending in Florida, Illinois, and Michigan. Most of the companies, it was said, have withdrawn from Arkansas rather than incur the heavy penalties threatened by anti-trust legislation.

A membership of 115 companies was reported, three having retired during the year. The Palatine Fire Insurance Company was admitted.

The committee of twenty appointed to investigate fire conditions, reported on twenty-four cities. Conditions were pronounced generally bad, either through ignorance or dishonesty. They were especially condemned in Jersey City and Hoboken. The committee's ideas were approved except in the case of Paterson, where the board has paid $7,000,000 in fire losses, and the water supply is in the hands of a private corporation.

The committee's expenses have been about $10,000 a month, and Mr. Cores of the Home Fire Insurance Company intimated that his concern might withdraw if the inquiry was to be carried on at such a heavy cost. The committee, however, was continued with an appropriation of $104,000 for the coming year by a vote of 48 to 7.

The high-pressure water supply for fire purposes which is about to be installed in this city, the Chairman said, was worth all the money which the board had spent on the committee of twenty. The Chairman said that salt water was not to be used, as it was believed that the necessity for it would never arise, but that if it ever were required provision has been made for it.

President Washburn in his address said that 1904 had been the year of heaviest losses, not excepting the years of the Chicago and Boston conflagrations, and that up to March 1 there had been five fires with damage of more than $1,000,000 each. He declared the suggestions of President Roosevelt as to the National supervision of insurance as embodied in two bills before Congress would not be satisfactory to the underwriters without radical amendments. Smaller rewards were offered and smaller rewards paid for the detection of incendiaries than for many years.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

President—John H. Washburn; Vice President—George W. Burchell, Vice President Queen Fire Insurance Society; Secretary—Charles A. Shaw, President Hanover Fire Insurance Company; Treasurer—Marshall S. Driggs, President Williamsburg City Fire Insurance Company; Executive Committee—George B. Edwards, Vice President Germania Fire Insurance Company; F. O. Affold, Manager Hamburg-Bremen Fire Insurance Company, and R. M. Bissell, Vice President Hartford Fire Insurance Company.

The meeting ended with a banquet at Delmonico's.

It was announced last night that fire insurance rates in Bayonne had been advanced 50 per cent., and in Jersey City and all other municipalities of Hudson County had been raised 30 per cent.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Dried Mushrooms Are Dutiable at 25 Per Cent.—Other Decisions.

In a decision written by General Appraiser Waite, the Board of United States General Appraisers yesterday sustained claims filed by a number of Chinese importers regarding the rate of duty applicable under the Dingley tariff law to dried mushrooms. The importers in the case, Tsue Lund, Washington, D. C.; Hip Lung & Co., and others in Chicago; Yuen Wo and others in Portland, Oregon; Kwong Sing Wo & Co and others in Honolulu maintained that dried mushrooms are properly dutiable under the provision in the law for "vegetables in their natural state, not specially provided for," with duty at 25 per cent. ad valorem.

The Collectors of Customs, however, took the view that the merchandise was dutiable at 40 per cent. under the proviso for "vegetables prepared or preserved." Judge Waite sustains the claims and holds that the goods are dutiable at the lower rate. The decisions of the Collectors of Customs are reversed with instructions to reliquidate the entries in accordance with the finding of the General Board.

Other importers' claims sustained were by Brown & Eadie, C. H. Richard & Co., the Kny-Scheerer Company, New York.

The board partially sustained protests by Zimmermann & Meyer, Max Meyer & Co., P. Hauban, and others, New York; H. Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia; Rosenthal & Grotta, New York.

Importers' contentions deemed without merit were by Voss & Stern, Ollvier & Co., Velt, Son & Co., New York; Marshall Field & Co., Chicago.

DIVORCE FOR MRS. FISCHER.

Upsets Decree Obtained by Husband Against Her.

Justice Marean of the Supreme Court has signed a decree of divorce in favor of Bertha Fischer against William Fischer of Brooklyn. This is the final chapter in a tangle of matrimonial troubles that began about a year ago, when William Fischer sued, or said that he sued, his wife. The wife was greatly surprised when she read that he had obtained a judgment of divorce from her and attacked the decree.

Upon her application the decree was set aside and she was allowed to come into court and put in a defense. This she did, denying the charges against her and making counter charges. Through her attorney, Henry A. Doellinger, the issues in the case were tried before Justice Marean without a jury, and the husband did not appear. Justice Marean gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff.

SHOW PICTURES FOR MIKADO.

Photographs Taken for Him at Novel Benefit Performance.

For the benefit of the widows and orphans of the Japanese soldiers who have been killed in the war in the Far East a novel tableau performance will be given at the Belasco Theatre this afternoon at 3 o'clock. Never before have Japanese women of high rank appeared on the public stage. The costumes, armor, and other accessories to be used are heirlooms that have been handed down from the thirteenth century.

The Japanese Consul General's wife will take part in the tableaus. Others are Mrs. Imanishi, Mrs. Iwahara, Mrs. Robert Maclay, Mrs. Walter Littlefield, Miss Amy Richardson, Miss Beatrice Elliot, Mrs. Jessie E. Moffat, Mrs. J. A. Garland, Miss Louie Dew, Miss Burton Emmet, Miss Charlotte Talbot, the Misses Gilder, Mrs. McGrath, and Mrs. Partridge.

The tableaus to be given are founded on Mrs. Hugh Fraser's story of "The Stolen Emperor." But, as it is contrary to all the Japanese traditions and ideas of right and wrong to have the Emperor and Empress personated on the stage, the story which contained these personages had to be altered. The dress rehearsal last night went off smoothly. The patronesses expect that they will clear something like $5,000.

The Mikado, who has heard about the benefit, is very much interested in it—so much so that he has asked that photographs be taken especially for him and sent to Tokio. Flashlight photographs were taken at the rehearsal last night.

In the performance there will be seven scenes. From two to six tableaus will make up each scene. The story of the play will be told briefly beforehand, so that the audience may understand what they are looking at. The demand for seats thus far indicates that there will be few empty seats. Mr. Belasco made no charge for the use of the theatre, so all the receipts will be clear profit.

Every programme will contain a resumé of Mrs. Fraser's story. It is made up very elaborately and will sell for 25 cents.

The treasure chests of the richest and most aristocratic of the Japanese were emptied to supply the garments to be worn by the actors and actresses this afternoon. These costumes are so old—some of them—that their present owners know not who made them or how many ancestors have worn them before. Queer-looking daggers and swords that were perhaps employed hundreds of years before the first entrance of the Japanese into this country will be displayed.

Among the patronesses and those who will attend the performance are Mrs. Winthrop Chanler, Mrs. H. McK. Twombly, Mrs. Clarence Mackay, Mrs. James Speyer, Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, Mrs. Mason C. Davidge, Mrs. W. D. Sloane, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Mrs. Cadwalader Jones, Mrs. Hilborne L. Roosevelt, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, Mrs. F. W. Whitridge, Mrs. Orme Wilson, Mrs. E. H. Harriman, Mrs. F. L. Y. Hoppin, Mrs. H. F. Dimock, Mrs. M. Dwight Collier, and Mrs. John E. Cowdin.

The men who will take part in the performance are the Messrs. Furukawa, Aburatani, Takata, Yaitsu Hoshi, Hashiguchi, Yokota, Ishimura, Iba, Onodera, Asai, V. F. Handly, A. D. Forrest, Master Littlefield, and Ningyo San.

VANDERBILT WILL TEST AUTO.

Dr. Thomas's Gordon Bennett Racer Arrives Here—Fast Time Assured.

W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., it was announced yesterday, will test the racing car entered by Dr. Harold E. Thomas for the Gordon Bennett race abroad on Long Island roads to-morrow. The car has already shown very fast time in a preliminary run near Bridgeport made early this week by "Joe" Tracy, who has been selected to drive the car in the international race in France early in July.

Tracy brought the car to the city yesterday, running down from Bridgeport by easy stages, and the machine arrived at an automobile garage at Columbus Avenue and Seventy-sixth Street early last evening. A number of automobilists who were apprised of its arrival were on hand, and from their superficial examination they made the unanimous statement that it was the finest appearing racing car ever built in America. A. L. Riker, who designed the car, was present, and he was naturally pleased with the showing made in its run near Bridgeport, when it did a mile in 45 seconds, the fastest time ever made on an American road by a motor car, and which ties the official mile road record made in Cuba last February by Fletcher, who drove a French car.

This new racer, from which great things are expected in the Gordon Bennett race, is rated at ninety horse power; but Mr. Riker said it would show 150 horse power, and he predicted that it would do 90 seconds on a mile straightaway at Ormond.

GOV. CUMMINS ARGUES FOR FIXING OF RATES

Is Opposed to Government Ownership of Railroads.

NO SPECIAL COMMERCE COURT

Tells Senators That the Law, as Far as Rebates Is Concerned, Is Effective.

WASHINGTON, May 11.—Gov. A. B. Cummins of Iowa testified to-day before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, which is considering railroad legislation.

He criticised the statement by railway men that rates were low enough now and the impression, he said, they endeavored to convey that the object sought was to give power to the commission to fix all rates.

He argued that there was nothing unjust in giving the commission the power which the proposed legislation would confer upon it to correct an unreasonable and discriminatory rate between kinds of traffic and localities. He advocated the establishment by Congress of a tribunal to give business competitors a "square deal" in securing transportation to market.

He said that badly adjusted railway rates had removed Iowa's chances of becoming a manufacturing State and affirmed that the railroads were opposed to the present interstate commerce law and to the safety appliance laws.

Chairman Elkins declared at this point that before the committee got through with the Interstate Commerce law it would be amended. "We think it needs amending," he said, "and we will amend it in some particulars that will suit you," he added, addressing Gov. Cummins.

"If power is given the commission to fix rates it should have the power to either raise or lower rates," suggested the Governor.

"But rates would always be reduced, would they not?" asked Mr. Elkins. "Is not that the complaint?

"No," replied the Governor, "the complaint is often that too low a rate is given to the other fellow."

Gov. Cummins declared that the law, so far as rebates were concerned, was as effective as it could be made. He thought the assumption of Government ownership of railroads would not be a safe policy, as under it the railroads would become a vast political machine.

DELHI DISQUALIFIED, LONG SHOT GOT RACE

Witch Hazel Placed First After Foul by 1 to 7 Favorite.

JENNIE McCABE'S STAKES

P. J. Dwyer's Filly, at 20 to 1, Took the Van Ness at Belmont Park—Paget Horses Twice First.

Delhi, winner of $76,000 last year and the pride of James R. Keene's big racing stable, made his first appearance of the season at Belmont Park yesterday, finished first, as a 7 to 1 on favorite, and then was disqualified for a foul, and lost the race to a weed from the Keene breeding farm, Witch Hazel, a 20 to 1 chance that really ran for third money. Though there were only three starters, Delhi, after the disqualification, was not even third, no third horse being placed. It was the most unsatisfactory race of the year in the result, and though a great number of small bettors who tempted fate by backing Witch Hazel for the place and in some cases to win, on the chance that something might happen, were jubilant over the outcome, and the decision was a disastrous one to the betting ring.

Delhi ran in the third race of the card, a condition event, at seven furlongs, which let the champion three-year-old of 1904 in with light weight, and though eleven horses were named to start Delhi's recent fast work and his established class frightened out all but two, Hot Shot and Witch Hazel. Delhi, ridden by Shaw, was a prohibitive favorite from first to last, about all the betting on the contest being between Hot Shot and Witch Hazel for the place, with just a little scattering play on both of these to win the race. Delhi broke first and galloped in the lead all the way, Witch Hazel closing on him a bit as the horses came into the last furlong. Shaw there had eased up the favorite, and seemed to be winning in a big gallop, but when Witch Hazel went after him Shaw went from a pull to hustling, and, seemingly fumbling with his reins, jerked Delhi over so that he went out against Witch Hazel, jostling the filly back a bit, Delhi then straightening out, and going on in the lead to win without urging by three parts of a length, with Witch Hazel second and Hot Shot beaten off third.

Powers, the apprentice who rode Witch Hazel, made a claim of foul against the winner, and Shaw was called up and questioned by the Stewards. Shaw admitted the foul, explaining that he attempted to draw his whip when Witch Hazel went up to him, and in the movement lost control of Delhi sufficiently to let the horse swerve over against the filly. Under the rules, the foul having been proved by the admission of the rider, there was but one course open to the Stewards, and Delhi was set back. The Stewards for the occasion were Harry Payne Whitney, Herman B. Duryea, and S. S. Howland, who acted to relieve the regular Stewards, one of whom was Mr. Keene, who, following custom, declined to act when his own horse was running.

Mr. Keene was irritated at the queer outcome of the race, as Delhi, a horse of his own breeding, is his especial favorite, but he took a philosophical view of the result, and declined criticism of the decision that had been credited to him, adding that the disappointing outcome would not have any influence on the engagements of his horses at Belmont Park. Shaw's statement as to how the foul happened satisfied the Stewards, and no action was taken concerning his ride.

Immediately following the award of this race to Witch Hazel, the betting men received another shock, when in the race for the Van Ness Stakes, six and a half furlongs, selling, for three-year-olds, another 20 to 1 chance scored, the winner being P. J. Dwyer's filly, Jennie McCabe, ridden by the apprentice, J. Johnson. Jennie McCabe was one of the outsiders of the seven horses that ran, Quadrille starting favorite, with Czaraphine the next choice. Jetsam and Quadrille each had a turn in front, to the bend into the stretch, where Quadrille ran out, and Jennie McCabe closed on the rail, and getting up in the last half furlong, won easily from another 20 to 1 chance in Black Prince. DALY ON BILLIARDS.

Fresh from viewing the billiard play of the foremost Parisian professionals and amateurs, Maurice Daly returned to his academy yesterday. The Dean of the professional billiardists in this country, as Daly is often called, said that the sport was more active than ever in the French capital, and, for that matter, all over the continent of Europe, while in England there had been an endless array of professional matches, Stevenson, Dawson, and John Roberts playing games of the English variety of as many as 20,000 points.

Paris was still the centre of the game with the cue and ivory balls, and it was in the academies and cafes that Daly saw the best of the sport. He says that Maurice Vignaux, the world's champion, is in ill health, and it is certain that he will never again be seen in this country. Vignaux is not playing with any great show of skill, although he takes part in the regular short games upon which the spectators bet in the Grand Cafe and the Passage des Panoramas. George Sutton, the American, is with Vignaux, and from the work that he accomplished with his cue when Daly saw him play it is the opinion of the latter that he is to be reckoned on for the American championship, if not as champion of the world, whenever he wishes to return to this country or to break with Vignaux and challenge him for the titles he now holds. Such a course would be unwise at the present moment, according to Daly, for the Frenchmen fairly idolize Vignaux, and the player who would seek to wrest his honors from him in his old age would find it difficult to find work for his skill with the cue and ivory spheres in France.

Another American, Ora Morningstar, is playing with Garnier at the Cafe Olympia. Morningstar has also improved greatly, and is doing fine work in the rapid, scintillating play which the Parisians demand. The academies are all open and doing a great business. The spectators are still allowed to place bets upon the results of the short games, after the manner of betting on the horse races in this country. The case which is to eventually close the betting in the academies has been delayed in the French courts, but Daly says that the professionals all realize that it is only a matter of a little while before they are certain to be compelled to abandon money play.

The amateurs have outstripped the professionals, if anything, Daly thinks, and both the Class A and Class B championships held in Paris while he was there brought out big entries and more spectators than could be accomodated. Reroile, who defeated Wilson P. Foss, the American, a year ago in the international contest, outclassed his competitors and won the Class A title with ease. Daly says it is nothing for this remarkable Frenchman to average above 20 right along in his tournament matches. The Class B honors were won by a young Belgian whose performance in the final match was an average of a fraction above 13 for 400 points, eighteen-inch balk line, with two counts allowed in each inning. The rules of the amateurs' game has been brought about by the organization, the Federation of Amateur Billiard Players, which is somewhat like the kindred organization in this country, and has been very active in fostering matches and tournaments.

JEROME REVIEWS SOLDIERS.

District Attorney Receives Ovation at Military Show—Athletic Events.

District Attorney William Travers Jerome reviewed the soldiers last night at the Military tournament in Madison Square Garden. He received a grand ovation as he entered the Garden accompanied by a brilliantly uniformed escort. The record crowd of the week was out, all the arena seats and the boxes being filled early, and as the District Attorney took his place in the reviewing box loud applause broke out from all parts of the building. Col. Edward Duffy of the Sixty-ninth Regiment commanded the review, and it went off without a hitch.

Eight athletic events were concluded previous to the military features. P. J. Walsh won the final heat in the 100-yard military championship, and H. W. Cohn won the final of the half-mile military championship. No records, however, were broken during the evening. The heats in the one and two mile bicycle races were well contested and provided an interesting novelty for the spectators. The summaries:

GERMAN AUTO TEAM FILLED.

Fifth American Car Also Entered for Vanderbilt Cup Race.

Entries for the Vanderbilt Cup race came in lively yesterday. Chairman Robert Lee Morrell of the Racing Board of the American Automobile Association received by cable from Germany notification that the German Automobile Club had nominated its four other cars, which, with the one sent last week, complete the German team of five cars. Robert Graves of this city is the owner of the first German car to be entered, but the owners of the four nominated yesterday have not yet been announced.

In addition to these, the American team of five cars was completed by the entry of a new American racing car by Lowell M. Palmer of the Long Island Automobile Club.

Twenty cars are now assured for the race. France, Germany, Italy, and America all having five cars entered. England has not yet been heard from, and it seems improbable that any home-made cars will compete.

St. Louisians Unable to Hit Mathewson and Are Shut Out.

Mathewson's clever pitching and Dahlen's brilliant display at short stop were mainly responsible for New York's second victory over St. Louis yesterday, the score being four to nothing. The best the visitors could do at the bat was five first-base hits, and two of these were to the infield, but too difficult to handle. Altogether the St. Louis batsmen sent but six balls to the outfield throughout the game, and Donlon, Mertes, and Browne each gathered one on the fly. Dahlen's work could not have been excelled, and most of his chances were stops of rather long and hard hits, which required fast and accurate throwing to first to catch the runners. Gilbert also had a strenuous day around second base, but the exhibition of this usually reliable fielder was marred by two mistakes, one a fumble of a ground hit and the other a failure to hold a thrown ball by Mathewson.

Taylor also did well in the pitcher's box for St. Louis, having one inning, the seventh, when the New Yorks collected four singles, three of these difficult infield hits, and scored three runs. He was well supported in the field, Clarke making the only blunder at second base. Beckley's first-base play was executed in perfect style. "Jack" Warner, New York's old catcher, was wildly cheered as he went to the bat for the first time, but he hit only one ball to the outfield—a fly—out of four times at the bat, and his opportunities for fielding consisted of one strike-out and an effective throw to first base.

Mathewson at the very start aroused the enthusiasm of the spectators by striking out the first three men who came to the bat, but, with that exception of four bases on balls, every one of the visitors connected with the ball in some fashion. In several instances a St. Louisian reached so far as third base, but a weak to the infield would spoil the chances for scoring. The score:

CINCINNATI, 8; BROOKLYN, 7.

The Brooklyns suffered another surprising defeat by Cincinnati yesterday at Washington Park, the score being 8 to 7 at the end of the tenth inning. Hanlon's men started off encouragingly by making seven runs in the first and third innings, mainly by good batting, while the victors were only able to score twice. Cincinnati reduced the lead somewhat in the sixth inning, but in the eighth Scanlon weakened, and the visitors hit his delivery sufficiently to score three runs and tie the game.

The Cincinnatis ended the suspense in the tenth inning. Reisling, who succeeded Scanlon on called balls, and with Schlei's safe hit, the winning run was scored, with two men out. The fielding was poor on the part of both teams, that of the Brooklyns being very ragged.

EASTERN LEAGUE.

Jersey City Turns Tables on Providence, Winning by 3 to 1.

Jersey City turned the tables yesterday on Providence in the second of the series of four games on the home grounds, winning by a score of 3 to 1. As on Wednesday, McAuley almost threw away the game. Neither side had scored up to the fifth inning. Jacklitsch, for Providence, reached first on a safe hit. McAuley in an attempt to catch him "napping" threw the ball so wide to Vandergrift that it rolled to right field, and "Jack" ran around to third base. Ball sent a high ball to Keister, and the Providence catcher scored on the out, beating Keister's throw by the fraction of a second. The score:

RESPECT FOR LAW.

The reply of President ROOSEVELT to the representatives of the striking teamsters of Chicago was dignified, intelligent, and to the point. What is especially to be commended in it was his avoidance of any generalizations which could be construed into an expression of sympathy with the attitude of men who, to accomplish a purpose, are maintaining the conditions of anarchy in a great city. It would have been very easy for the President to say something intended to be emollient which would have admitted of distortion into an expression of sympathy with their aims and means. That he safely avoided this warrants the belief that the lesson of the anthracite strike, in which his official fingers were badly scorched, was not lost upon him.

By the delegation to which he had granted audience a memorial was handed to the President in the form of a protest which was an insult to his intelligence and an effort to intimidate him in what may become before long an act of Executive duty. He was properly displeased by it and made no concealment of his displeasure. His reply was calm, judicial, and conclusive. He said in part:

> I regret that you should in the letter have spoken at all of the use of the Federal Army as you have there spoken. No request has been made to me for action by the Federal Government, but at the same time, Mr. SHEA, as you have in this communication to me brought up that fact, I want to say one thing with all the emphasis in my power. * * * In every effort of Mayor DUNNE to prevent violence by mobs or individuals, to see that the laws are obeyed, and that order is preserved, he has the hearty support of the President of the United States, and, in my judgment, he should have that of every good citizen of the United States.

This is sound doctrine. It cannot be preached too often or with too much emphasis. Respect for law is the lesson which organized labor most needs to learn. It has assumed that it was superior to law, or, more properly, a law unto itself. It has held every form of crime excusable by which the ends of organized labor were sought. President ROOSEVELT is to be complimented upon his courage in telling the committee appointed by the Chicago Federation of Labor just what it most needed to know on the highest authority.

THE MAXIMUM OR STANDARD RATE

President ROOSEVELT accepts Secretary TAFT's definition of a proper and desirable rate-making law. In his speech at the Iroquois Club on Wednesday evening the President said:

> My views on that subject could not have been better expressed than they were expressed yesterday, I think, by Secretary TAFT, in Washington, and as they were expressed by the Attorney General in his communication to the Senate Committee a couple of weeks ago.

It becomes therefore of the highest consequence that we should know exactly what Secretary TAFT said. We quote from The Washington Times's verbatim report of the speech of the Secretary of War at the railroad men's banquet on Tuesday evening:

> As I understand it, what is proposed only is that in litigated cases a Commission shall be constituted that shall fix a maximum rate. In other words, the Commission shall go through the same process that it now goes through to fix what is unreasonable and simply say that for a certain time that shall be the maximum rate. It seems to me that the step there, from one to the other, actually and practically, is comparatively slight. What I am strongly in favor of, though, is that we shall have a body that shall decide things and that these things shall be decided within a reasonable time, finally by the courts.

Mr. TAFT had previously explained that "in the mental process of determining whether a rate is reasonable or unreasonable you have got to fix in your mind what is a maximum rate." As the Commission is now empowered to determine when a rate is unreasonable, and to order a reasonable and therefore a lower rate to be fixed, he holds that it would be a simple matter to declare in figures, specifically, the maximum which this lower and reasonable rate should not exceed. We learn from this verbatim report of the Secretary's words that this maximum or standard rate is not to be declared in a general way, but only "in litigated cases" and "for a certain time." That is, whenever an appeal was made to the Commission or whenever it of its own motion ordered an unreasonable rate corrected, it would in that particular case fix a maximum rate which the railroad would not be permitted to exceed, and this maximum rate so fixed would hold good "for a certain time."

This is the plan that the President has in view. It is acceptable to him. He says so. How would it work?

In the first place, it would overwhelm the Railroad Commission with an impossible burden of labor. It must be understood that the fixing of a railroad freight rate, whether it is the actual charge to be imposed or only the maximum rate not to be exceeded, involves labors quite different in their nature and extent than those performed by the Commission in declaring a certain rate to be unreasonable. The inquiry made by the Commission in determining the unreasonableness of a rate is frequently protracted and laborious. But when it has been performed and the order to correct the rate has been issued, the Commission drops the matter, its work is done.

To take the next step, and after determining that a rate is unreasonable to attempt conscientiously and in good faith intending to do full justice both to the carrier and to the shipper, the determination and fixing of a maximum which the reasonable charge should not exceed, would be a very different matter and by no means so simple and easy as Secretary TAFT supposes. Upon the one hand the Commission would be expected to employ due diligence to fix the standard so low that no wrong should be done to the shipper and to the business community; upon the other it would have to be extraordinarily careful not to establish a standard that would involve loss to the railroad. The Supreme Court has decided that a rate involving a carrier in loss is unlawful. The laws of this State provide that railroad freight charges shall not without the consent of the corporation be so reduced as to produce less than ten per centum on the capital actually employed. Shylock's knife was poised when he was told that he might take his pound of flesh. But he was altogether baffled when admonished that if in the carving he spilled one drop of Christian blood the consequences would be most unpleasant for him. In that delicate and difficult situation the Commissioners would find themselves at every stage of the attempted performance of their duty.

That is not the whole story. Mr. WALTER D. HINES, counsel of the Atlantic Coast Line, in his testimony before the Senate Committee the other day, declared that the railroad systems in the territory south of the Ohio and the Potomac and east of the Mississippi, comprising 17 per cent. of the total mileage of the country and 12 per cent. of gross earnings and traffic volume, employed 100 responsible traffic officers whose principal business it was to study commercial and other conditions and determine freight charges and classifications. In addition to this these railroad systems employed four hundred to five hundred traveling freight agents, soliciting agents, and commercial agents who were largely occupied with the question of rates. Mr. HINES's testimony gives us some idea of the vast labor which would devolve upon the Commission were it authorized and required to determine for the whole territory of the United States, in each case as it arose, what is a reasonable maximum charge for carrying freight on railroads. It would be beyond the powers of any Commission to do the work faithfully and well. The consequences would be so disastrous that, as was declared by a railroad man of the highest standing and long experience in our columns yesterday morning, "if such legislation should be enacted the business communities which now advocate it would be the first to denounce the rate-making Commission, as well as the law."

THE MAYOR AND PENSIONS.

The Mayor has with reasonable promptness disapproved the Yale bill for pensioning city employés. He has done so for the very simple pair of reasons that the employés of the city are amply paid for their services, and that killing this bill will help to save his "successors" from the pressure that will undoubtedly be brought to bear upon him. The bill was opposed by the City Club and the Civil Service Reform Association.

The same organizations opposed the bill that has been represented as intended to cover the case only of the venerable JAMES BRICE, who has become blind after thirty-eight years of faithful service in the Chamberlain's office. But had the bill applied only to that case the opposition would hardly have been made, and the Secretary of the Reform Association has written to the Mayor that their opposition will be withdrawn if the Mayor thinks that the bill applies to Mr. BRICE's claim only and would not be a precedent for pension bills for single persons and single departments. The language of the bill shows that it does apply to the Controller's and Chamberlain's offices, and the fact is that there is in these two offices only one man who would benefit by it. We do not see how he could be enabled to benefit by it without others with like claims, should they exist, also benefiting. To that extent the bill must make a precedent, and of course precedents of this sort are always stretched. Nevertheless, we think it a perfectly justifiable thing to pension any city servant who has done faithful work for thirty-five years and "has become physically or mentally incapacitated for the further performance of the duties of his position." Fifteen hundred dollars a year to all the men in such case is not going to ruin the Treasury, and if the Legislature stretch the precedent it will to that extent really violate the precedent.

THE RUSSIAN CRUISERS.

The sortie from Vladivostok of the three remaining Russian cruisers there is precisely what one would expect "about this time." A main object of this sortie must be the diversion of the Japanese attention and some part of the Japanese strength from the combined squadrons of ROJESTVENSKY and NEBOGATOFF, just as the like sorties of SKRYDLOFF from Vladivostok a year ago were meant primarily to withdraw ships from the blockade of Port Arthur. The damage that may be done to Japanese commerce, or even to Japanese communication with the mainland of Asia, is in either case secondary and incidental.

Considering the necessity the Japanese are under of husbanding their ships of the line, it is unlikely that any such ships will be diverted by this device from the main objective. It is possible that they may find themselves able to afford a diversion of ships of the class of the Vladivostok cruisers to meet and fight them. But it is not probable, considering the conduct of the Japanese Admiralty last year, when they permitted the ships of SKRYDLOFF to have things all their own way for a season rather than to allow themselves to be diverted from the more important object of the destruction of the Russian ships at Port Arthur.

The raid of the Vladivostok ships nevertheless seems to shed some light upon the whereabouts, and also upon the "whenabouts," of the coming and decisive sea fight. It will be noted that the Vladivostok ships are reported as operating off the Western and not off the Eastern mouth of the Tsugaru Strait. Assuming the squadron to be intended as a possible reinforcement to the combined squadrons, this fact is significant as tending to negative the notion that ROJESTVENSKY means to avoid a conflict in the Strait of Korea by putting out into the open sea to the eastward of the Japanese islands, with the intention of coming in again north of Nippon. The Tsugaru Strait has already been notified to be within the Japanese "zone of defense," meaning that it is mined and neutral commerce warned off from it, and doubtless like preparations have been made with reference to La Perouse Strait, further to the north.

During his stay at Kamranh Bay it appears that ROJESTVENSKY was in telegraphic communication with St. Petersburg, which in turn could communicate freely with Vladivostok. The Vladivostok squadron has accordingly been sent where it could do the combined squadrons most good. That is to say, between the Japanese islands and the mainland of Asia. And this in turn should mean that the combined squadrons are to take the same course, and that the decisive conflict, upon which Russia has prepared to concentrate all her naval strength, will take place in the Strait of Korea, where Japan can also concentrate hers. And the alarm sounded by the operations of the Vladivostok ships in the Tsugaru Strait would appear to mean that those ships have been so sent out that their arrival at the scene of action was expected to synchronize with the arrival of the two Baltic squadrons. In other words, conclusion seems warranted that the final fight is expected to take place in the Strait of Korea, and within a few days.

THE WHEAT OUTLOOK.

The May wheat report of the Department of Agriculture confirms as far as possible the flattering prospect of April and makes the surprising showing that since the April figures were gathered the condition of the crop has further improved to an extent warranting some addition to the estimate. The May report shows that the area under cultivation in Winter wheat is about 29,723,000 acres. This is 1,432,000, or 4.6 per cent., less than the area sown last Fall, but it is 10.6 per cent. greater than the area of Winter wheat harvested last year. For the 29,723,000 acres remaining under cultivation the average condition on May 1 was 93.5 against 91.6 April 1. The mean of the May averages for the last ten years is 83.7.

Of course the chief interest for the reader who is not a grain expert, and scarcely less so for one who thinks he is, is to find out what these percentages foreshadow in bushels. Theoretically they appear to warrant an estimate of 460,000,000 bushels. Making all due and reasonable allowances for shrinkage between now and harvest, a conservative estimate would be about 415,000,000 to 420,000,000 bushels. Last year's wheat harvest yielded 332,935,346 bushels. This looks very satisfactory, but of course there are pessimistic persons who are sure that something will yet occur to disappoint the Nation in the tally of the harvest. There will be no more authoritative reports until the harvest is in. Cutting begins in June and will be finished with July.

DYNAMITE AS FREIGHT.

A railroad corporation of the character and organization of the Pennsylvania Railroad should not have needed the dreadful reminder of the calamity at South Harrisburg to make it aware that dynamite as freight needs very different handling from pig iron or cotton cloth. This fact would at no time probably have been disputed in the office of the general freight agent; but it does not seem to have been realized fully and clearly enough to prevent a large quantity of dynamite from being shipped in two cars made up in a general freight train. This train seems to have buckled in the process of shunting, the dynamite cars were struck by a fast express filled with passengers, and the result was one of the most appalling accidents recorded in the history of American railroading.

If it is the habit of the railroads to receive explosive freight and handle it in this way, it is time this habit was changed. Dynamite should not be permitted to be shipped by rail under conditions in which, even with the happening of the unexpected, it can be exploded by concussion. There are explosives which may be shipped with perfect safety, since they are not energized until two ingredients, non-explosive when separate, are brought together at the moment of use. No doubt dynamite is cheaper, and perhaps more convenient, but neither cheapness nor convenience justifies the existence of conditions making possible such a sickening slaughter of passengers.

PROGRESS OF THE MERIT SYSTEM.

A very striking statement of the progress of the merit system was made at the dinner of the New York Civil Service Reform Association by Mr. HENRY F. GREENE of the Federal Commission, and this was fully confirmed by the report of the Executive Committee of the association.

It may be said that the merit system attains its majority this year in the Federal service. The law has been on the statute books for twenty-one years. It is with no disrespect to his predecessors that we note that for the first time in that period we have a President who thoroughly understands the nature and objects of the system, and is determined to apply it as thoroughly and extend it as rapidly as he can in the actual condition of Congressional and public sentiment. We have had Presidents like Mr. CLEVELAND, whose sympathy with the purposes of the law was as strong, but who did not so clearly grasp their bearing on the business of the Government and who did not comprehend the means by which the law could practically be made to do its work. We have had Mr. MCKINLEY, who in a degree was actually educated in the law by his experience of the consequences of his own laxity in enforcing it, and who would have advanced greatly during a second term. But Mr. ROOSEVELT had the initial tendency toward the right conception of public service, had the training of the Assembly and the Governor's office in this State and that of the Civil Service Commission in Washington and who unites to a determination to do as well as the politicians will let him an extraordinary shrewdness in inducing or compelling the politicians to do the right thing. The result is that within the wide range opened up by the elastic terms of the law Mr. ROOSEVELT has expanded and reinforced and established the merit system as has never before been done in its history.

Broadly speaking, there is a very insignificant number of offices in the Federal service, outside of the Fourth-class Postmasterships, to which the merit system can be applied that have not been brought within it. During the year that has just closed, the law has been made to embrace, by executive action, 538 places in the Forest Reserve Corps, 360 finance clerks in the Post Offices, the Inspectors and agents in the Interior Department, who have to do with protecting the Government and the public against land frauds, and the body of the Isthmus Canal employés, including a considerable number of skilled mechanics. It is especially to be noted that these extensions have in numerous instances been directed to precisely those classes requiring probity on the one hand or skill on the other, which it has been urged that competition could not satisfactorily test. It has been found that with good-will and good judgment, and with a firm use of the probationary period, competition can bring out these classes at least far better than the exercise of such discretion as is ordinarily used in the distribution of "patronage."

There has been also a great change for the better in the temper of Congress, and this, too, is in large measure due to the influence of the President, who has taught the Congressmen by precept and example that respect for the merit system is not incompatible with much partisan efficiency. For the first time in twenty years Congress has made no attempt openly to hamper the Commission, whose office is now better manned and organized than at any previous time. Turning from the Federal field to our own State and city, it is not too much to say that with the Republican administration of the one and the Democratic administration of the other the authority of the civil service law is recognized and respected steadily more and more. There is much to be done, but the reformers are now fighting for extension and for improvement of the system: they are no longer forced to fight, as they were for so many years, for its mere existence.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Typewriters and Love Letters.

In lauding, recently, the machine which, for want of a better name and at considerable risk—especially when elderly admirers exalt its merits—is called the typewriter, we admitted, as we supposed from necessity, that even in the United States, where the use of the machines is so nearly universal, they are still debarred by common consent from the pleasant and extremely important task of turning out love letters. And do we get praised for accuracy—for careful avoidance of exaggeration? Not a bit of it. Saucy striplings right in our own office have quietly derided the admission as evidencing editorial ignorance of the habits of the present generation, and young men and maidens at a safer distance have doubtless spoken of it much more harshly as new proof that "the newspapers never get anything right." For 'tis to be declared on what seems to be good, and certainly is fair, authority that the one domain whence we supposed the typewriter—we're still discussing the machine, remember—still to be excluded rigorously was long since invaded by it, and that now love letters more than a few, and even more than a good many, are daily rattled off with its aid, to the complete satisfaction, apparently, of both composers and recipients. If such things are it would be much worse than useless to ask if they can be. The proper question is, Why not? To it, fortunately, we have no answer. Presumably elderly admirers of the steel pen were once shocked when there came to them the belated news that those prosaic substitutes for the accustomed quill were by some considered good enough for the expression of the sacred passion. We are unreasonably glad, however, to learn from the high authorities already referred to that even now not all love letters are machine-made, and that though the last fortress has been captured, its citadel is still defended by a heroic garrison—of Amazons. And we refuse any credence at all to a hideous rumor that nowadays some love letters are not only typewritten, but are also dictated to a secretary, and by him or her prepared for the mail. It may be true, but to admit it would be unendurably painful.

"Working" the Philanthropists.

Why is it that Dr CRONIN, as head of the school inspection division of the Health Board, after calling deserved attention to the very important fact that something like a third of the children in the New York public schools are suffering from defective vision to a degree that seriously handicaps them in the competition with their fellows, should see in the need of glasses and medical care thus revealed an opportunity for some philanthropic millionaire to put his wealth, "tainted" or other, to a "good" use? "If," he says, "some of the unhallowed money which is now causing so much useless talk with reference to its acceptance for the purpose of civilizing savages were directed toward the poor people from whom it came, that money would be sufficiently purified to satisfy all consciences. The poor children of the tenements should be able to have glasses when they need them." Only as an afterthought does Dr. CRONIN suggest that the city should use some of its own money for this work, so far as it is a public work, and it apparently does not occur to him that a vast majority of the parents of the children in the public schools are able, and, if they appreciated the need, would be willing, to incur the small expense involved in an examination of their offspring's eyes and the subsequent purchase of suitable glasses. We are far from attempting to minimize the gravity of the situation Dr. CRONIN's figures show. "Eye strain" has disastrous effects on both body and mind—yes, and on soul, too, sometimes—and probably it accounts for no small part of the backward pupils who recently received so much discussion from the school authorities, but it is extremely irritating, to some of us, at least, that whenever something needs doing the first thought should be of getting one of the fashionable dealers in wholesale charity to do it. Those dealers make a great point of so distributing their millions that nobody shall be pauperized, and yet it looks sometimes as if, however it may be with the individual beneficiaries of this new largess, the thing is having a most demoralizing effect upon communities, which are fast coming to have the true beggar's callousness about accepting from others the things they are perfectly well able to provide for themselves, and the true beggar's eagerness to pay with whining gratitude instead of his hoarded money for both luxuries and necessities. Few American towns lack adequate resources for buying at market rates whatever they feel they ought to have, and their self-respect should suffer much oftener than it does when somebody comes along and gives them something—a library, say, or a hospital—which they should long since have given themselves. Far, far, be it from us to reprehend or discourage the millionaire who has generosity and public spirit, but the municipality that keeps taxes down by giving him a cheap halo causes intense weariness—to some, as aforesaid. Others it vastly refreshes.

No Enemy to Face at Present.

There is soon to be erected in Memphis a bronze equestrian statue of Gen. NATHAN BEDFORD FORREST. Both the idea and the statue seem to be entirely satisfactory to the people of the city, but there has developed among them a curiously passionate antagonism to the way in which the statue is to be placed. Owing to the nature of the site and its surroundings, that happens to be with its face toward the south, and this, according to some of the dashing cavalryman's admirers, is to "turn his back to the enemy," something which, they say, he never did in life. Instead, he looked the other way, sought his antagonists on their own ground, and in his meteoric career operated there with brilliancy and success. Answering these criticisms, CHARLES NIEHAUS, the sculptor, reminds the sensitive veterans that it is the almost invariable custom to set the statues of warriors, as of others, with their faces toward the south, simply to get the best light upon them, and that if this statue were turned in the other direction it would be in the shade most of the day and present its back to Union Avenue—a queer name in the circumstances—the handsome driveway from which it will be most often seen. The "back to the enemy" people received a respectful hearing, but their arguments did not prove persuasive, and on the 16th inst., when the statue is unveiled, sound sense will be found to have overcome decidedly unsound sentiment. President ROOSEVELT and the Cabinet have been invited to the ceremonies, as well as many Governors and other public men, and it will be a proud day for the women of Memphis, who collected most of the money that bought the tribute to the gallant soldier—whose abilities, by the way, won quite as much appreciation in the North as in the South, though in the former, of course, the appreciation was a little slow in finding expression.

Credit for Memorial Work.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your report this day of the "Unveiling of the Statue to Jewish Soldiers" that took place yesterday, I notice that you omitted making mention of the acceptance of the same by our Colonel, Isaac Eckstein, to whom, with the strenuous efforts of our Adjutant, Isidor Isaacs, we are indebted for the ultimate success of the erection of the statue, they having in the demise of our greatly lamented Colonel, Joseph Stiner, toiled unceasingly to complete the work for which he paved the way.

SALARIES AND PENSIONS, TOO.

A Side Light on the Wholesale Retirement of Police Officers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The retirement of so many Police Sergeants and Captains at one time, as has just been done by Commissioner McAdoo, may be a good move to get rid of "dead wood" that clogs the movements of the force, but the people and taxpayers should consider the awful burden it puts upon them.

I do not mean the burden of pensions that falls upon the public alone, but the further burden of having all these retired men competing with the public in the field of labor.

In many of the downtown offices of banks and insurance companies, brokers, &c., will be found men pacing outside the railings and in the corridors of the large buildings. Nearly all of them are ex-policemen who have secured these very desirable positions by meahs of "pull" or in the foolish idea held by some people that an ex-policeman does better in such a place than any other man. It appears to me wrong to permit a man receiving a pension of $700 or more a year to hold such a place, and thus prevent a needy applicant from securing employment.

It would be only fair to make the holder of such a place renounce his pension while so employed and recover it again when his place is vacant. Seven hundred dollars a year is a good deal more than the average income of the heads of families in this State, as proved by statistics, and it is against public policy to compel the public to pay a pension to an able-bodied man whose earning power is in some cases a great deal more than he received as a member of the force while doing full duty.

I know of one particular case of a policeman who has been receiving a pension of $600 a year for twenty-three years, and is now in receipt of $3,000 a year salary in a certain company on Broadway.

ART IN ADVERTISING.

Let Academy of Design Regulate Subway Signs, One Plan.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your correspondent from Brooklyn who likes the Subway signs and asks for more, offers a most interesting psychologic problem. We grow from what we feed on. Our streets are ugly, in spite of spasmodic fits of a studied architecture. Are the passers to and fro in those streets to grow ugly likewise? We have lived in these stony, treeless stretches for years, but now are we going to turn salamanders and say we like to broil?

And our glaring signboards—have they so vitiated and paralyzed our sense of color that all delicate gradations, as of the sunrise I saw this morning, delicate pinks and lavenders and nameless mist tints leading up to blazing crimson and orange, but never a primary color among them—lost to us? And because we have seen them so often, shall we be condemned only to see staring shapes that assault the eye and never be allowed any respite from their vigorous onslaughts?

If anything is meant by the existence of our art museums and art instruction for the public, whose only reason for being is that the State does take some responsibility and authority in matters of education, then the State also should protect in some measure the citizens from demoralizing influences.

An attempt has been made in the way of rationalizing advertisements in the painting of the wooden fence around the Academy of Design's art schools at One Hundred and Ninth Street. While it is not as successful as the newsdealers' kiosks in Paris, perhaps it is more American. Let us give the art gallery of the Subway in charge of the Academy, with power either to exterminate or modify.

Does John Bull Show More of It Than — Uncle Sam?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Walking down lower Fifth Avenue yesterday morning the writer, whose great-grandfather was wounded and all but killed by a British bullet at Bunker Hill, was genuinely delighted to observe a handsome British flag floating jauntily from a hotel window in the fresh Spring breeze. From a corresponding window on the other side of the hotel entrance a beautiful new American flag of similar size snapped and rippled in the brisk wind as though fully imbued with the importance of demonstrating an exuberant welcome.

It was learned that the ensigns were displayed in honor of Lord Brassey, the eminent English publicist and gallant yachtsman, who at the age of seventy-four has brought the Sunbeam over to try conclusions in the transatlantic yacht race to start from Sandy Hook on Tuesday next. And the writer's soul was thrilled at the spectacle of these two noble banners, which mean so much for the welfare and progress of the human race, flaunting their proud folds in friendly unison in the dancing sunshine of New York.

For the flag of Britain is indeed a rara avis in this town. Not so our own starry emblem in the British metropolis. From any coign of vantage in London it is easy at any and all times, daylight and fogs permitting, to pick out a dozen or more American flags flying from hotels, clubs, business houses, &c. Next to the Cross of St. George, Johnnie Bull makes no secret of his preference for the Stars and Stripes. He far outdoes ourselves in matters pertaining to international courtesy and hospitality.

Why this is so is past finding out. The collisions we have had with our British cousins have accrued much more to the advantage of Uncle Sam than to themselves. Why, then, do we persistently allow England to outshine us in generosity?

Mr. Foley's Schoolboy Lyrics.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Foley's lyrics seem to have a reason for their fantastic spelling. This catches the eye, draws attention to the heavily laboring mind of the schoolboy, and imitates his quaint pronunciation. It appears that the erratic absences of punctuation and the vagaries of capital letters aid in the good work. Correct these oddities and one's laugh dies to a smile; the labored lyric becomes rather a commonplace (though often pretty) lyric. I admire the real humor displayed in the mixture of high-flown words and very domesticated dialect. There is a distinct reminiscence of "Pyramus and Thisbe" or the interludes of "Love's Labors Lost." But on the whole I am in doubt whether it is all mere fooling. At any rate it is most enjoyable, especially when read aloud.

DAUGHTER UNVEILS STATUE OF HEWITT

Ceremony Takes Place in Chamber of Commerce.

EULOGY BY CHARLES S. SMITH

Alexander E. Orr and Morris K. Jesup Make Addresses—Statue at Head of Grand Stairway.

In the presence of many well-known men, the statue of the late Abram S. Hewitt was unveiled yesterday at the Chamber of Commerce and placed at the head of the grand stairway. Alexander E. Orr, Morris K. Jesup, and Charles Stewart Smith were the speakers, the eulogy of Mr. Hewitt being delivered by Mr. Smith. Mr. Hewitt's daughter Eleanor unveiled the statue.

Lord Brassey, who has been President of the London Chamber of Commerce, and who is now in this country, about to engage in the international yacht race, attended with Lady Brassey. Bishop Potter closed the ceremony with a benediction.

Alexander E. Orr, who was one of the committee appointed two years ago to get the Hewitt statue, presented it to President Jesup.

"The services of the eminent sculptor, William Couper," said Mr. Orr, "were secured, and, aided by many valuable suggestions from Mr. Hewitt's family, this admirable representation of Abram S. Hewitt has been chiseled out of pure Carrara marble, to be placed at the head of our grand stairway, there to remain, as time passes, a lasting monument to that truly good and great and patriotic man."

In his reply to Mr. Orr, President Jesup said:

"As we receive this gift of love and esteem, we shall place it on the pedestal prepared for its reception. It will be forever kept as our choicest possession; we shall guard it from all accident and defacement. It will last as long as this building of marble and steel exists, and, when we are gone and new faces and forms come here to consult as to commerce, trade, and finance, the form of Mr. Hewitt will be close by, to remind us and those who come after us that, after all, the only greatness in man that lives for all time is in imitating the life of him who draws his inspiration from the good Master Himself, who said: 'I came not into the world to be ministered unto, but to minister.'"

Charles Stewart Smith reviewed the main events of Abram S. Hewitt's life and showed how he grew into a great benefactor of the people of New York. Among other achievements for which we gave Mr. Hewitt credit was the laying down of just principles in contests between labor and capital.

"Mr. Hewitt, in a speech in 1880," he said, "made suggestions which, if carried out in good faith, would go far toward solving this vital problem. They are worth reading. They express to-day the last word upon this issue, which was never more menacing to public prosperity than at present."

Later in his address Mr. Smith recalled an incident showing Mr. Hewitt's sympathy:

"Mr. Hewitt's ready and magnanimous sympathy for the unfortunate," he said, "is illustrated by the fact that a man without influential friends, then unknown to him, but who afterward became notorious in the political affairs of the city, was indicted for murder and placed on trial for his life. Mr. Hewitt became convinced, upon evidence brought to him privately, that the man was innocent of the charge. He retained, at his own expense, a prominent lawyer to defend him, and secured his acquittal.

"Great as were Mr. Hewitt's intellectual qualifications," went on Mr. Stewart, "his heart, more than his brain, often controlled his conduct. Character was his standard of success. He was a worker for humanity, and has made the world better worth living in for those who come after him. He acquired breadth of vision and insight which penetrated beneath the popular opinions and policies of the hour, and advocated principles which are of universal application in all time. He adopted as his motto, 'Be just and fear not.' It was the keynote of his character and actions."

According to Mr. Stewart, Mr. Hewitt "more nearly approached the ideals and spirit of Edmund Burke than any man of our generation." In closing the speaker summed up the result of his study of Mr. Hewitt's life and character by quoting the words of Adam Smith concerning his friend Hume:

"'Upon the whole, I have always considered him, both in his lifetime and since his death, as approaching as nearly to the idea of a perfectly wise and virtuous man as the nature of human frailty will permit.'"

LAWYERS AS GUM CHEWERS.

Have They Special Privileges in Maxillary Exercise?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Fifty years ago it was looked upon as a mark of ill-breeding for a person to chew gum while in the company of strangers. Nowadays it seems to be considered nothing improper for a lawyer to chew gum in a courtroom while prosecuting his professional duties.

I am at a loss to understand this marked disparity between the social ethics of half a century ago and those of to-day. Or have lawyers come to be regarded as a specially privileged class, being allowed to use their jaws and tongues simultaneously in a twofold capacity? Truly, we are livin' in a progressive age—progressive with a decided downward inclination in some things. At least, that is the way it looks to me.

A WOMAN OF SEVENTY.

New York, May 9, 1905.

A PLEA FOR THE PRACTICAL.

Mere Beauty? What place have such yearnings
In breasts of dull toilers for wage!
We value a thing by its earnings,
For ours is a practical age.

Those cliffs that they prated of saving,
While standing were useful to none;
But, shattered to fragments for paving
They bring several dollars per ton.

Our parks, where sheer Indolence drowses?
Waste acres—a nuisance are they;
We'll crowd them with tenement houses
And thread them with highways—they'll pay!

How long shall disorderly Nature
Our universe dare to invade!
Petition a wise Legislature
To outlaw the termagant jade!

And then shall we fill in the valleys;
The mountains we'll level as low.
In parallel, wharf-bordered alleys
The riotous rivers shall flow.

And when we've reformed the abuses
Of cañon and forest and tide,
Enslaving all force to our uses,
We'll show to our children with pride

The Highlands, resplendently lettered,
Proclaiming the Paragon Pill;
The Yellowstone harnessed and fettered
Niagara turning a mill!

JAPANESE NOT AFRAID OF THE RUSSIAN FLEET

Papers Confident Togo Can Defeat Rojestvensky.

FRENCH ATTITUDE DEPLORED

It Is Said If More Aid Is Given to the Russians Japan Will Have to Appeal to Great Britain.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

TOKIO, May 11.—The Japanese press disclaims all unfriendliness to France, which country it has hitherto regarded with good-will and admiration, and is now unwilling to count as an enemy.

Further, it is declared, Japan does not fear the Russian Baltic Fleet, but contemplates its approach with calm confidence and desires a naval engagement as soon as possible so that the war may be advanced another stage.

But, it is added, whatever allowance is made for France's delicate position, Japan is compelled by the dictates of self-defense to consider also her own position. She cannot ignore the fact that the most crippling factor in Admiral Rojestvensky's situation, the want of a naval base in Eastern waters, has been effectually removed by France's extraordinary conception of neutral obligations, as a result of which Japan saw a Russian naval base established at her very portals and the enemy's arena of belligerent operations rendered practically coterminous with her own maritime frontiers.

Thus, it is said, an enormous advantage has been conferred upon Russia and irreparable injury inflicted upon Japan. Should this continue Japan, however reluctant to extend the area of the war or to impair the Anglo-French entente, which she heartily approves, must necessarily appeal to her ally to assist her against a combination which changes the whole complexion of the conflict.

The latest intelligence shows that Rojestvensky was still at Hon-Kohe Bay on May 6.

By The Associated Press.

TOKIO, May 11.—The following announcement was made by the Japanese Foreign Office to-day:

"Since the Kamranh Bay incident the French Government has instructed both the civil and military officials in Indo-China to maintain a close watch on the coast of French territory and to warn belligerent ships not to enter French waters.

"When it was reported that the Third Russian Squadron (Nebogatoff's)—was approaching French waters the French Government again instructed the naval authorities to maintain a close watch and take effective measures with all their power to prevent a violation of neutrality, and it simultaneously notified the Russian Government."

PARIS, May 11.—A semi-official statement from high sources was published this afternoon giving France's position in reply to Japan's charges of breaches of neutrality. One of the arguments is:

"Japan has done in the Philippines and the Dutch East Indies the same as she accuses France of doing in Indo-China."

The conclusions are set forth as being:

"First—The French neutrality regulations were not established for the present war, but existed previously, without protest from Japan.

"Second—France has not only exercised her sovereignty to fulfill the regulations to the full letter, but has also adopted special measures to maintain absolute impartiality.

"Third—The only direct purchases of coal by the Russians were at Algiers, where the quantity was insignificant. The main stock of coal was purchased in Germany and England without protest.

"Fourth—Any advantages which the Russian Second Pacific Squadron obtained by anchoring off the French coast were equally open to the Japanese if they had taken the offensive instead of awaiting the Russians."

ROJESTVENSKY DELAYED PEACE.

His Appearance in China Sea Said to Have Stopped Negotiations.

LONDON, Friday, May 12.—The Daily Telegraph's Tokio correspondent says he knows for a fact from official sources that peace between Japan and Russia was nearly concluded when the unexpected appearance of the Russian Second Pacific Squadron in the China Sea revived Russia's hopes.

"Even now," the correspondent says, "nobody here doubts that peace is coming through President Roosevelt's offices, he having learned that Russia desires to end the war and having ascertained the terms which would be agreeable to neutral powers.

"Recent councils of Japanese statesmen settled in principle the renewal of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, which will involve a new and definite policy with regard to the future of Manchuria and Korea."

ACCUSED OF TREASON TO JAPAN.

Ex-Officer Arrested in Connection with Charges Against Foreigners.

TOKIO, May 11.—Ex-Lieut. Iwasakia, formerly an officer of the Engineer Department of the Japanese Navy, has been arrested in connection with the charges which resulted in the arrest of A. L. Bougouin and his stepson, F. Strange, charged with being spies of the Russian Government.

Iwasakia was dismissed from the navy and deprived of his rank in 1904 for alleged misconduct, and he has since been under police espionage.

The preminlinary hearing of the charges against Bougouin and Strange is now proceeding, but the dates for their arraignment and trial have not yet been decided.

Bougouin has for a long time been held in high esteem by the Japanese, and he has been decorated by the Emperor.

Various Attacks on Russian Positions —Two of Them Repulsed.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES. Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 11.—The Japanese have initiated a series of minor operations, alternately on the right and left of the Russian position. Gen. Linevitch's latest dispatch records several such attacks northeast of Tie Pass, which are regarded as the prelude to an advance.

By The Associated Press.

GUNRU PASS, May 11.—The Japanese advance now appears to have been a feint to ascertain the strength of the Russian outposts. The latter have again been pushed forward on the left at Lafangol, Erdahol, and Toungol, and along the centre line from Podysouzache to Shihouza, where the Japanese attacked the Russians May 7 and May 8 and were repulsed.

The next day, in order to oust the Japanese from the Shahetzy mines, from which their attack was organized, a column of cavalry, supported by artillery, moved forward under cover of the Russian guns, and the mines were turned, the Japanese retiring first to Sinianzou and later to Madiopa, three miles south of Chantafu.

Prisoners say the new troops from Japan are old men and youths. They give the Japanese losses at Mukden as 12,355 killed, and about 70,000 wounded.

Marshal Oyama was at the front during the recent activity, making his headquarters at Chantafu.

Emperor Is Also Said to Have Called Russian Troops Immoral.

BERLIN, May 11.—Emperor William, addressing the higher officers after a review of troops at Strassburg to-day, said, according to the Strassburg Bürger Zeitung, whose statements may be taken with some reserve:

"The Russian Army which fought at Mukden had become enervated by immorality and drunkenness. Only in this way can its defeat at Mukden be explained.

"As Russia has shown weakness in the presence of the yellow danger, circumstances might arise which would place upon Germany the task of opposing this danger.

"Officers and men must spend their time well, so that they shall not fall into immorality and intemperance."

London Paper Hears Unhoped-For Relief Is to be Accorded.

EIGHTEEN DEAD IN ZHITOMIR

City Now Quiet—Russian Socialists Tell the Workmen to Arm on May Day.

LONDON, May 11.—The Jewish Chronicle says:

"We are informed on high authority that important developments may be anticipated in the situation of Jews in Russia. We are informed that a measure is more than under consideration which will give unhoped-for relief to Jews.

"Absolute freedom of movement and residence will be granted in all cities and towns, but not in villages, as the authorities are not willing to run the risk of a repetition of the Kishineff affair.

"We understand that the murder of Jews causes the Government more anxiety than of persons of other nationalities because of the reprobation it arouses in Europe."

ST. PETERSBURG, May 11.—The Novosti (the Jewish organ,) says it has information showing that the massacre of Jews at Zhitomir was regularly organized.

The Syn Otetchestva says Jewesses were assaulted in the attacks upon the Jews at Gostynin, (Government of Warsaw.)

The Government papers are not permitted to print details of the attacks on Jews.

Violent proclamations signed by the Central Committee of the Social Democrats were scattered broadcast among the workmen to-day.

After denouncing "the Emperor and his creatures" in unmeasured terms and demanding the abolition of the army as the first step toward the attainment of Socialism and equality, the proclamations summon the workmen to make a demonstration on the Russian May Day (May 14) and conclude:

"Remember, brothers, we must not allow the Bashi-Bazouks of the Emperor to prevent our holiday. Go forth armed. Let each man take such weapons as he can.

"Long live the May Day festival of the workmen!"

"Long live Socialism!"

Four armed men attempted to-day to break into the magazine of the Fourth Don Cossack Regiment at Schuchin, Poland, in order to blow up the stores of ammunition, but they were driven off by the guard after a revolver fusillade. They escaped.

ZHITOMIR, May 11.—Order has been restored in Zhitomir. There were no troubles yesterday or to-day, and The Associated Press correspondent, who arrived here last night, finds indications of the reign of lawnessness and riot which converted Zhitomir on Sunday night into a battleground of warring faiths only in heavy patrols of soldiery in the streets, many wounded in hospitals, broken windows, and roughly patched doors of many shops, and a still excited state of feeling among the populace.

Though the situation during the riots was serious enough, the reports of the massacre were exaggerated. In all there have been eighteen deaths, and sixty-five wounded have been cared for in hospitals, while twenty-six others received attention at their homes.

The greater number of the victims were Jews. Only three Christians were killed. One of them was Police Lieutenant Euzaroff, who was shot twice in the back on Sunday afternoon as he emerged from a restaurant. The murderer, a Christian, was arrested.

FREDERIC DE PEYSTER DEAD.

Member of Old New York Family Suddenly Stricken.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., May 11.—Frederic de Peyster of New York died here last night of angina pectoris, aged sixty-six. Mr. de Peyster had been in poor health for about six years, but when he arrived in Lakewood seemed no worse than usual. At 11 o'clock last night he was taken suddenly ill, and he died within an hour. A telegram was sent to the de Peyster home, in New York, and, with her son and three daughters, Mrs. de Peyster was hurried here in a special car.

Mr. de Peyster was to have made an address at the banquet of the New Jersey Society of Colonial Wars to-night. He will be buried from Trinity Church on Saturday.

Frederic James de Peyster was born in this city on Feb. 5, 1839. He was a descendant of one of the oldest Dutch families in the country. The first member of the family to settle in this country was John de Peyster of Haarlem, Holland. He was the leading man of New Amsterdam at the time of his death, in 1685. His son was Chief Justice of the province, and since then the family has given this country many soldiers, financiers, and men of letters. James F. de Peyster, father of Frederic James de Peyster, was a Trustee of the public schools in this city for forty years, and at the time of his death Chairman of the Executive Committee of the College of the City of New York.

Mr. de Peyster was graduated from the City College in 1860 with the degree of A. B., and was subsequently awarded the degree of A. M. He studied law at the Columbia Law School, from which he was graduated as LL. B. in 1862, and in 1864 took the degree of LL. M.

Mr. de Peyster practiced law in this city for many years. Having inherited an ample fortune, he was not tied down to his professional duties, and much of his time has been spent in the interests of charity.

He was at one time President of the St. Nicholas and Orpheus Societies and of the New York Dispensary. He was Chairman of the Society Library and a Trustee of the Home for Incurables, the American School of Classical Studies at Athens, Greece; of the Good Samaritan Dispensary, and of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb. He was President of the Associate Alumni of the College of the City of New York from 1882 to 1884, of the St. Nicholas Club from 1887 to 1889, and of the Archaeological Society from its foundation until 1889. He was Governor General of the Society of Colonial Wars, whose first Governor he also was.

He was also a member of the Historical, Numismatic, Holland, and American Archaeological Socities and a Fellow of the National Academy of Design and the American Geographical Society. His clubs were the Century, the City, the University, the St. Nicholas, the New York Yacht Club, and the Downtown Association.

He married in 1871 Miss Augusta Morris, a daughter of William H. Morris. Five children survive him. They are Helen Van Cortland, Frederic Ashton, Francis Goodhue, Augusta Morris, and Ella Morris.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

COUNCIL FOR PEOPLE IN RUSSIA, BARON SAYS

Self-Rule for Provinces Promised by Czar, Korff Declares.

REFORM ON ENGLISH PLAN

Professor at Helsingfors University, About to Wed Miss Van Reypen, Talks of Situation.

Baron Serge Korff of Russia, Professor of Russian Law at Helsingfors University, Finland, after a journey across from the Pacific Coast has arrived in this city en route to Washington, where on June 5 he will wed Miss Alletta Van Reypen, daughter of Admiral Van Reypen, retired Surgeon General of the United States Navy.

He said yesterday that the internal situation in Russia was full of hope and promise. Reforms were in progress, he declared, and when they were put in operation the people would find that they had got more than they had asked for.

Baron Korff said that the Emperor had expressed his readiness and desire to grant self-rule to the various Governments or Provinces of Russia, and that plans to this end are under way.

"But," he said, "one does not need a broad view of the situation to realize that the present is not the time to inaugurate these reforms. Russia's situation just now is a hard one. The war in the East is requiring the thought and the attention of the entire Government. Questions of importance are arising daily which must be settled at once. The country's honor and prestige are at stake, its resources must be conserved, and the foreign affairs are such as to command constant and undivided attention.

"In such a situation as this is it not to be readily seen that the questions of reforms at home must give way, temporarily at least, in the face of the greater problems which must be solved?

"As to the recent rioting in Russia it has been but sporadic. There has been no unity of action, and to talk of revolution in Russia is simply ridiculous. The country is too big for revolution. The people of the South are not in touch with those of the North. Their interests and their traditions are different. They have no more in common with the people of the North than the people of South America have with your New England States. The discontent which resulted in the rioting was purely economical. The war has depressed trade.

"The people want certain reforms, and they are to be given to them. The scheme is to be worked out along the lines laid down in England. Self-government is to be granted first to the cities, and then to the provinces, as I understand it. Working gradually from the bottom upward in this manner practical autonomy will be secured to the people.

"The Emperor must, of course, remain the head of the Government, and at first there will be no Parliament, but a Council, which will advise the Government of the needs of the different sections of the country. The Government thus will be in touch with the people, a condition which has not been possible heretofore, when information has come solely from prejudiced agents. This will be a great step forward, and is brought about as a result of the wider education of the people."

Baron Korff is not a stranger in the United States. He has visited here several times, more recently as Secretary of the Russian section of the St. Louis Exposition. He has traveled entirely across the Continent, taking the Pacific and American route after a visit of inspection to the Russian Bank in China.

An earnest worker in the Red Cross, Baron Korff has come in close contact with the Russian people of all sections of that vast country. It was while engaged in Red Cross work that he met Miss Van Reypen. After the wedding in Washington he will take his bride for a trip through Europe, and then to his home in Helsingfors.

BALFOUR SEES DANGER FROM RUSSIA IN ASIA

Alarmed by Strategic Roads Toward Indian Frontier.

BRITISH DIPLOMACY FAILED

Premier Tells House of Commons Home Ports Are No Longer to be Defended by Submarine Mines.

LONDON, May 11.—In the House of Commons to-day Premier Balfour, replying to a question on the subject, said the accepted policy in regard to the defense of commercial ports had been reversed. After long consideration by the Admiralty, the Committee of Defense had concluded that submarine mines constituted an inexpedient method of defending such ports. They were more likely to injure the defenders than damage the enemy.

Mr. Balfour pointed out that he was not alluding to blockade mines, which had played such an important part in the Far Eastern war.

Great Britain, said the Premier, was not going to fall behind the other nations in the matter of blockade mines, but in his opinion the use of floating mines ought to be brought up for the consideration of some international tribunal, for the damage and danger to neutrals which must result from scattering broadcast on the waters of the world these undirected engines of destruction were so great that he did not think civilized mankind should allow them to be used in haphazard fashion.

Mr. Balfour stated that in considering the difficulties of the invader, he was obliged to base his calculations on the supposition that the enemy would be France, the country nearest to Great Britain. It was unnecessary to add it was the last thing in the world he regarded as possible.

Detailing the plans evolved by the committee for the defense of the coast of Great Britain, the Premier said that, assuming the absence of the Mediterranean, Atlantic, and home fleets in distant seas, the Admiralty would have ready for service within a few hours six battleships and six first-class cruisers, besides twelve cruisers, twenty-four torpedo boat destroyers, and ninety-five torpedo boats now in the reserve, with the nucleus of their crews. He thought submarine boats would be of great importance as a unit in naval warfare generally, and at least in attempts to land soldiers on a hostile coast.

The Premier said it was the opinion of Field Marshal Lord Roberts that it was useless to attempt an invasion of Great Britain with less than 70,000 men, and even if they landed it was but a forlorn hope that they would reach London. The Premier believed it was impossible to land foreign troops in Great Britain, and therefore a serious invasion need not be contemplated.

Continuing, Mr. Balfour said that, having regard for the changes in the sea power of other nations, a redistribution of the fleet and army was desirable for colonial defense, and the Committee of Defense had concluded that the fleet and army should be concentrated in the centre of the empire, from which they would be distributed as necessity arose.

An invasion of India, said the Premier, had been the dream of many military leaders. The progress of Russia toward the Afghan frontier and the construction of strategic railroads had compelled the Government to consider with all seriousness what its great military neighbors could do. No surprise was possible in an invasion of India. Any collision of magnitude between two powers must depend upon the rapidity of railroad construction.

Mr. Balfour said that if Great Britain permitted the slow absorption of Afghanistan in a way similar to that in which the Central Asian States had been absorbed, and if Russia's strategic railroads were allowed to creep closer and closer to the frontier, Great Britain would ultimately pay for her supineness by having to keep on foot an army far larger than could be contemplated with equanimity, and she would be faced with the greatest military problems which had ever confronted her.

Mr. Balfour remarked that the development of Russia toward India had from time to time caused great alarm. Great Britain had in vain by diplomatic means endeavored to prevent Russia's expansion, which must now be taken as an accepted fact. Although the invasion of India was much talked of by Russian officers, he did not believe that it formed any part of the scheme of the Russian Government.

The Liberal leader, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, complimented Mr. Balfour on his statement, which, he said, would greatly dissipate the alarm of the country in regard to Afghanistan.

Sir Henry regretted the reference to France in connection with the prospect of a possible invasion of England, because it might fall into evil hands and occupy evil pens."

ALBANY, May 11.—The report of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company for the quarter ending March 31, filed to-day with the Railroad Commission, shows a surplus of $729,097 after fixed charges, as against $202,012 for the corresponding quarter last year.

(E) Trade Mark:

No. 31,390, registered March 8th, 1898. The trade-mark registered includes the letter A inclosed in a circle, as applied to cylindrical cotton bales.

(F) 1. All additional shares of the capital stock of the corporations named in subdivision (A) hereof and all shares of other corporations organized after April 1, 1902, formed by American Cotton Company subsequent to said last-mentioned date.

2. All additional letters patent, applications for letters patent, designs and trade-marks and all other property of every kind and description acquired by the American Cotton Company with the proceeds of the said debenture bonds.

3. All other chattels and personal property of said American Cotton Company appertaining to or forming a part of its business, excepting merchandise, accounts receivable and cash.

The said property will be sold as an entirety and in one lot or parcel, without covenant or warranty of any kind, nature, or description whatsoever.

All the right, title, and interest of the Central Trust Company of New York, as Trustee, in and to the above-mentioned several Letters Patent of Mexico, Brazil, Egypt, India, Russia, and Turkey is to be sold upon conditions as follows:

First: The sale and conveyance thereof are to be subject to all Government taxes and annuities which are now payable and which shall hereafter become payable upon said several Letters Patent of Mexico, Brazil, Egypt, India, Russia, and Turkey, or upon any of them.

Second: All notarial fees, Government taxes, and annuities and other expenses required to be paid to obtain and secure the passing of all right, title, and interest of the Central Trust Company of New York, as Trustee, in and to the above-mentioned Letters Patent of foreign countries to the purchaser or purchasers thereof shall be paid by the purchaser or purchasers thereof.

Third: If any of said several Letters Patent of Mexico, Brazil, Egypt, India, Russia, and Turkey shall have lapsed or become forfeited for non-payment of any taxes or annuity or by reason of failure to work the invention covered thereby, no deduction or abatement shall be allowed from the amount of the bid of the successful bidder for all the right, title, and interest of the Central Trust Company of New York, as Trustee, in and to all of said Letters Patent of foreign countries.

No bid will be received from any person who shall not first deposit with the undersigned or the aforesaid auctioneers as a pledge that he will make good his bid in case of its acceptance the sum of $10,000 in cash or by certified check on some incorporated bank or trust company of the City of New York, made and indorsed payable to the order of the Central Trust Company of New York. The deposit received from any unsuccessful bidder will be returned to him when the property shall be struck off. The deposit received from the successful bidder will be retained as part payment of the purchase price of the property so sold. On the acceptance of any bid the successful bidder shall forthwith enter into an agreement in writing in such terms form, whereby he shall bind himself to pay the balance of his bid at the office of the Central Trust Company of New York City, No. 54 Wall Street, New York City, on or before the 29th day of May, 1905.

The successful bidder, upon payment in full of the purchase price bidden in the manner and within the period herein limited, shall be entitled to receive the certificates representing the shares of stock enumerated in subdivision (A) hereof, together with transfers thereof executed by the persons in whose names said certificates stand, and an instrument or instruments in writing executed by the Central Trust Company of New York, as Trustee aforesaid, transfering or purporting to transfer such right, title, and interest as it may have as such trustee of, in, and to all the property herein described or intended so to be (other than that set forth in subdivision (A) hereof), together with such documents as may be in the possession of the Trustee (other than the original deed of trust securing said debentures) evidencing its right, title, and interest to such property or to any part or portion thereof.

Intending bidders during business hours of any day (Sundays and legal holidays excepted) prior to the sale of said property pursuant to this notice, at the office of the Central Trust Company of New York, 54 Wall Street, New York City, may examine any and all documents in the possession of said Trust Company evidencing its right, title, and interest to the property to be sold or to any part or portion thereof.

In case any bidder shall fail to make good his bid upon its acceptance by the said auctioneers, or shall fail after such acceptance to comply with the terms thereof, or shall fail to pay the balance of the purchase price, then the sum deposited by such bidder, whether paid in cash or represented by check, shall be forfeited as a penalty for such failure, and such bidder shall be held responsible for the payment of the expenses of the sale or of a re-sale, and for any deficiency or loss in case the property shall be sold at a less price at such re-sale.

So much of the purchase price as shall not be required by the undersigned Trustee to be paid in cash can either be paid in cash or the purchaser may satisfy and make good such residue of his bid in whole or in part by turning in to be credited on credits due the six per cent. gold debenture bonds and the coupons thereto appertaining of the American Cotton Company outstanding under said deed of trust dated April 1, 1902, and the purchaser will be credited on account of such bonds and coupons with such sums as would be payable in cash on account thereof out of the proceeds of sale if the whole amount of the purchase price were paid in cash.

The right is reserved to re-sell the property upon such notice as the Central Trust Company of New York may determine as sufficient, or without notice in the event that the purchaser shall fail or omit to make any payment on account of the unpaid balance of the purchase price on or before the 29th day of May, 1905.

The Central Trust Company of New York reserves the right to adjourn said sale from time to time, and to sell upon such adjourned day without further notice or upon such notice as it may in its discretion deem sufficient.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, May 11.—Money was in active demand in the market to-day in connection with the transfer of $15,000,000 to the Bank of England for the account of Japan and repayments due to the bank by the market. Discounts were steady. Bill buyers were cautious in view of contingencies.

Trading on the Stock Exchange was quiet and the tone was uncertain pending the outcome of the settlement. Consols eased slightly, depressing kindred securities, but closed with an improvement.

Americans opened quiet. The movements were irregular in the vicinity of parity, but operators generally were apathetic, and the market closed quiet.

Imperial Japanese Government 6s of 1904 were quoted at 101.

Bar silver was steady at 26⅝d per ounce.

Money, 2¼@3 per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 2¼@2 5-16 per cent. The rate of discount in the open market for three months' bills is 2¼@2 5-16 per cent.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 31.92; Lisbon, 8.50.

BANK OF ENGLAND.

LONDON, May 11.—The weekly statement of the Bank of England shows the following changes:

Total reserve increased £694,000, circulation decreased £238,000, bullion increased £455,749, other securities decreased £2,187,000, other deposits decreased £1,649,000, public deposits increased £289,000, notes reserve increased £687,000, and Government securities increased £120,000.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Strong; Call Money Easy, 2¼@2½ Per Cent.

Illogical but Encouraging Movement of the Market Under the Stimulus of the Crop and Other News.

If Wall Street were more logical it would be less interesting. If it always moved according to apparent influences everybody would be rich and there would be nothing left to conjecture. The response of the stock market to the crop news was the main point of interest yesterday, and prices did advance. Yet such is the difficulty of pleasing all, that the day's rise was not satisfactory universally. The point of dissatisfaction is that the advance did not come spontaneously and responsively to the intelligence regarding the harvest prospect, in the earlier portion of the day, but tardily, as though in response to encouragement, and was accompanied by strong produce markets. If the produce markets knew their business there was little in the crop news to bull stocks upon, and the early hesitation was correct. Hence, when prices started up later, there was a suggestion that other influences than so legitimate a supporting factor as prospective abundance of breadstuffs were at work. Of course it was not a demonstration. That is the defect of crop markets—they never can be demonstrated until the bushels are in the barns—and then it is too late to buy stocks to advantage.

What chiefly took prices up was aggressive strength in influential groups of stocks. If the Harriman Pacifics alone had been strong, or if the Northwestern group alone had been strong, the effect would have been much less than the fact that they were strong together. At once there was talk of dividend increases individually, and something good concerning the relations of roads and managers whose inharmony has been just cause for anxiety. The day's chief deterrent influence was apprehension regarding the pending franchise tax decision. Consolidated Gas was the weakest under this influence. Otherwise the day's significant declines were few and fractional, while the advances were larger and more numerous. But the increase in volume was so slight that no general buying movement can be discovered in the day's improvement. It was a room traders' rally, and if a corresponding decline follows in a day or two it will signify as little.

If railway traffics had just influence it might be said that the day's news was good, for there were excellent weekly and quarterly reports. But growth of business is so monotonous that it fails to attract attention. The war news passed into the background, and exchange at Paris and Berlin advanced without notice. London informed us that the assets of its embarrassed trader are "almost nil," giving us opportunity to say that speculation is not so very different upon the English and American plans as the remarks of our foreign friends upon our misadventures might lead us to imagine. The Banks of England and France report improving conditions, and the largest single export of gold ever made was started from South Africa for London.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 11.—If any change has taken place in the local money market it is toward greater ease. The usual table of rates, &c., follows:

Call loans, 3@3½ per cent.; time loans on collateral, 3½@4½ per cent.; Clearing House loans, 2½ per cent.; New York funds at par. Clearings, $25,322,705; balances, $1,500,427; Sub-Treasury debit, $28,377.

There was almost stagnation in the Boston market in the early part of the day. Commission brokers were in share of orders. Traders gave their attention to the New York stocks that are traded in on our local Exchange, but even this trading was limited. The strength in the New York list in the afternoon brought in a few buying orders in our local shares, and the tone improved, but the trading was very light. The close was quiet and without feature. A complete list of transactions follows:

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Bulls' Hopes Renewed — Conservatism Still Strong, However.

When the stock market closed strong and active yesterday, after a period of extreme dullness earlier in the day, a shout went up on the floor of the Stock Exchange, which gave voice to the hope that the liquidation was over and that visions of a bull market in the near future would not prove false. Emphasis was placed on the buying of yesterday and the day before, which was said to have been of the very "best" character. It is a fact, however, that those through whom this "best" buying would originate continue to express themselves with extreme conservatism, and although they do not countenance the efforts of the bears to force another break, yet they do not seem willing to encourage any speculation on the bull side at this time. They seem to think that a market with no pronounced tendency either way would be the most desirable.

For Conservative Purchases.

Commission houses have changed the tone of their advice, and instead of suggesting selling on the bulges, they now advise conservative purchases on the recessions. Their advice is based on the assertions coming from general sources to the effect that the raids of the last few days have failed to dislodge any long stock. Their counsel is, however, seasoned with the suggestion that it would be well to take profits quickly rather than hold stocks for a long pull. Brokers whose opinion is valued because of its general soundness say that, although the market seems to be headed upward, yet its condition is such that this tendency could be very easily changed, and for this reason they advise limited and cautious trading.

Conflicting Opinions.

Even though bearish sentiment is diminishing, opinion on yesterday's market was by no means unanimous. There were a good many who thought the advance merely a rally due to covering by shorts, to be in turn followed by another recession. One broker pointed out that Union Pacific sold at the same price last week which it touched yesterday, namely, 122⅞. Since then it has sold as low as 117. The moral brought to be deducted is that there is nothing to prevent its selling there again, perchance next week. On the advance above 122 yesterday Union Pacific came out in large blocks, showing that some one was willing to let go of some stock at those prices.

All Eyes on Togo.

The event which causes the market the most concern just now is the probable outcome of the expected battle between Togo and the Russians. This is a matter which is being discussed everywhere in the Street. A prominent banker who met the Japanese Consul General, Uchida, at a dinner the other night said that the meeting of the two fleets was considered of sufficient importance for him and some of the other big men present to ask Mr. Uchida where he thought Togo was. The Japanese Consul replied that he would be glad to tell them if he only knew, but that Togo had apparently been swallowed up by the sea, as no one seemed to know anything about his whereabouts. "But," he added, "in eight or ten days you will hear of a big naval battle."

Demand for Bonds Slack.

The bond market is being very closely watched just now. By common consent it has not been good for several months, and any change for the better would be considered as indicating a revival of investment demand, which would ultimately benefit the stock market. If, so the bond houses say, money should continue cheaply as at present for some time, the owners of this money would be forced to buy again in order to get a better rate than the loaning rates. So far there has been little indication of any improvement. The demand for bonds is still slack, and, although business on the Exchange yesterday was somewhat in excess of that for the last few days, it was still way below the dealings recorded at the turn of the year.

John W. Gates's Views.

John W. Gates sent a wire to a Boston firm yesterday in which he said that he came back from the West two weeks ago inclined to bearishness on the situation. This statement will be interesting news to those who read Mr. Gates's published statement given out at that time in which he declared himself a bull. Mr. Gates now says that he has in the last two weeks gone very carefully over the situation, has "checked up" the commission houses, and believes that good stocks are going higher. He says that securities are again in the hands of the wealthier men and of the financial institutions and that therefore he thinks such stocks as Union Pacific, Southern Pacific, St. Paul, Louisville and Nashville, Illinois Central, Amalgamated Copper, and Steel preferred are going higher. The Gates firm was yesterday reported to have been a big buyer of some of the stocks mentioned. A trader who read Gates's latest exclaimed: "What I want to know is, does he mean it any more now than he did two weeks ago?"

Bootblack Made Money.

"If there be any who doubt that money can be made in Wall Street," said a broker yesterday, "let him take an example of my bootblack. He is a big, curly-headed Italian, and he has shined my boots for years. When the market is active he makes good money—hence he was much disappointed when, last February, he was taken ill and had to quit on the advice of his physician. I had not seen him since until yesterday after the market closed, when he turned up in a brand new suit of clothes looking very happy. He had been to Italy with his family for two months and had come back cured. At 2 P. M. he had got out of Ellis Island, where he had been detained by the crush for two days. At 3 P. M. he was ready to black boots again. His hand must be kept busy in blacking boots, but he had pulled enough out of a good tip to pay for a vacation trip home in the steerage."

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 11.—There was a little more activity in this market, but the trading was largely in Reading and the Steels. The home stocks did not show much animation, but were generally firm to strong. United Gas Improvement wavered within a point's range, but closed near the top. Philadelphia Electric held at yesterday's level, while Westmoreland Coal warrants advanced from 37½ to 39. Lehigh Valley advanced ¾, but was not active, and Philadelphia Rapid Transit rose ⅝ on small dealings. There was a general dearth of news, operators apparently having a mild attack of hay fever. Bonds were quiet and firm. Total sales, 37,168 shares; $78,200 bonds. The list follows:

THE OUTSIDE SECURITIES

Market Broader, Showing Generally Firm Tone.

Seven-Point Jump in Northern Securities—Question Affecting Profits Made in New Seaboard Issues.

Transactions in the outside market yesterday included a larger number of issues than had contributed to the previous day's business, and a majority showed strength. The seven-point jump in Northern Securities was the most interesting feature of the market, but it caused no surprise because it has for some time been recognized that the technical position of the stock made an advance altogether likely. The stock sold from 163½ up to 170, and closed at the very highest. The bull tips on the stock that were so widely spread before the collapse that occurred after the stock rose to 185 were again in evidence yesterday. Every one appeared to have heard from some one that the stock was to go to 200, and a majority of the traders appeared willing to accept the information as probably well founded. The stubs did not share at all the advance in the stock. They were offered in large amounts at 400, and at one time sold down to 362½.

INTERNATIONAL MERCANTILE MARINE preferred was weak. The price broke from 28 to 26¾, rallied a point, and later was offered down again. The trading, although not heavy, was larger than had been recorded in the stock in many days. Support seemed to be lacking, and the traders generally assumed a bearish attitude toward the issue. The common was extremely dull. Transactions in the 4½s were limited to one bond at 79.

SEABOARD AIR LINE.—The modification of the plan for the readjustment of the finances of the Seaboard Air Line, which has already been assented to by a substantial majority of both classes of the company's stock raises the question whether or not the "when issued" contracts in the new stocks that have been made since the original plan was announced are invalidated by the change that has been made. There has been considerable trading in these new stocks "when issued," and substantial profits have been made by some traders in them. If the Union Co. were to be invalidated these profits would be lost. A banker closely associated with the Seaboard committee stated yesterday, however, that in his opinion these transactions would stand for the reason that under the modified plan similar securities would be issued, and that changes had been made only in details.

No Kansas City Southern Contest.

The voting trustees, the Executive Committee, and the Board of Directors of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company held a meeting yesterday in the offices of the Union Pacific Railway Company. ASCHER, SAMUEL.—The People of the State of New York, by the grace of God free and independent, to THEODORE ASCHER, Adolph Ascher, Julius Ascher, Sophie Schultz, Matilda Hartsch, heirs of SAMUEL ASCHER, deceased, send greeting: Whereas, Minna Ascher, widow of deceased, of the City of New York, has lately applied to the Surrogate's Court of our County of New York to have a certain instrument in writing, bearing date October 21st, 1903, relating to both real and personal property, duly proved as the last will and testament of Samuel Ascher, late of the County of New York, deceased, therefore you and each of you are cited to appear before the Surrogate of our County of New York at his office in the County of New York, on the 22d day of May, one thousand nine hundred and five, at half past ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, then and there to attend a judicial settlement of the account of proceedings of Ellen Connell and Mildred Mason as executrices of the last will and testament of said deceased, and such of you as are hereby cited as are under the age of twenty-one years are required to appear by your guardian, if you have one, or if you have none, to appear and apply for one to be appointed, or in the event of your neglect or failure to do so, a guardian will be appointed by the Surrogate to represent and act for you in the proceeding.
In testimony whereof, we have caused the seal of the Surrogates' Court of the said County of New York to be hereunto affixed. Witness, Hon. Frank T. Fitzgerald, a Surrogate of our said County of New York, at said County, the 27th day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and five.

EUROPEAN HOTELS.

SAVOY HOTEL

LONDON.

OVERLOOKING THE RIVER AND EMBANKMENT GARDENS.

Never has the Press of England shown greater unanimity than in its praise of the additions and improvements to the Savoy Hotel, London, upon which have been spent upwards of one million pounds sterling.

The new building is characterized by extreme luxuriousness.
The Times.

The magnificent buildings of the Savoy make a truly noble show.
Daily Telegraph.

The building is palatial—the greatest possible comfort combined with luxury.—Morning Post.

One of the most sumptuous and costly interiors in London.
Daily Graphic.

A remarkable addition to the architecture of the Strand.—Standard.

All is peace and refinement.—Pall Mall Gazette.

One of the most luxurious and one of the most comfortable hotels in the world.—Referee.

A scale of luxury hitherto unattempted in any hotel in London.
New York Tribune.

More beautiful than ever.—Morning Leader.

A delight to the eye—no lavishness seems to have been grudged.
Sportsman.

One of the handsomest of London edifices.—Globe.

Elegance and artistic character are everywhere. Nothing has been omitted that could conduce to the comfort and content of the visitor.
Ladies' Field.

The most beautiful hotel in Europe.—Outlook.

An ideal home for twentieth century London.—Queen.

The great pile of buildings included in this latest addition to the architectural sights of London forms a combination of luxury and beauty which cannot be surpassed in the wide world. The New Savoy is a vast palace of a thousand splendours, of a thousand surprising and delightful innovations Nothing that could contribute to the comfort, the smoothness, and the joy of life is wanting which the inventive genius of America and Europe could supply, or that the taste and skill of the world's schools of art in all its branches could furnish. The place is, in its way, a very triumph of genius. Its match is not to be found in London, nor in Paris, nor, indeed, in any capital of this little planet. To do it justice in a necessarily brief article is impossible. Having rambled through its glorious salons and galleries, and ante-chambers, up and down marble staircases of noble breadth, beneath panelled ceilings, adorned in relief with exquisite golden tracery, one feels that all this royal magnificence, this opulent beauty, might well inspire a volume which should be bound in white satin and gold.—Western Mail.

JUDGE WAS KIDNAPPED, CROWD LYNCHED NEGRO

Missouri Desperado Tracked by Dogs and Posse.

WIFE HELD FOR RANSOM

Husband After Being Made at Pistol Point to Drive to Lonely Hut, Sent Back for $600.

Special to The New York Times.

COLUMBUS, Ky., May 12.—Belmont, a small town across the Mississippi River, twenty-five miles from here, was to-day the scene of the most daring crime in the history of this community.

County Judge Ferdinand Hess, an ex-State Senator, and his young wife were kidnapped by a negro ex-convict, who at the point of a drawn revolver made Judge Hess hitch his buggy and drive with his wife to the negro's lonely cabin several miles from town, where he held Mrs. Hess a captive until her husband could come here and get $600 with which to ransom her.

The money was procured and delivered by another negro, after which the first left the cabin, and, eluding a posse that was lying in wait for him, made his escape into a neighboring swamp. Bloodhounds were put on his trail and he was surrounded, taken to Belmont, and lynched in the public square at 6:45 o'clock to-night. A. D. Edmonstone, State Statistician of Missouri, was in the posse.

Early this morning Judge Hess had occasion to go to his barn to hitch up his horse. He was in his slippers, but otherwise attired in street garb. Entering the barn he was startled by seeing a negro standing by him with drawn revolver.

"Who are you, and what do you want here?" asked the Judge.

"You know who I am," replied the negro. "I'm 'Bob' Witherspoon. The State owes me $600, and you got to get it for me."

"All right. Come on to the house until I can get my boots, and we will go to town and get the money," said the Judge.

At the house he requested the negro to wait outside while he went up stairs to get his boots. Mrs. Hess was standing on the front porch as they came up.

Judge Hess started up the steps leading into the house, but the negro commanded him to halt.

"Let your wife get the boots," he said.

Mrs. Hess did as she was directed. When she came back the Judge changed his footwear and the negro made both of them get in the buggy and drive slowly before him to his cabin, some miles out of town. When they reached there Witherspoon flourished his revolver and said:

"Judge, if you cares anything for your wife, you'd better hustle and get that money. You go and get it and we'll stay here until you comes back."

There was nothing else to do but go, and the Judge took a skiff and crossed the river to Columbus. He informed friends what had occurred, and they immediately secured the money and organized a posse of armed men. On the way to the negro's house ways and means of getting the money to him and preventing him from escaping were discussed.

A negro preacher named Sherman was picked up some distance from the landing and engaged to take the ransom to Witherspoon, while the posse scattered and secreted themselves so as to intercept the desperado. Sherman found Witherspoon and his captive in the cabin, paid over the money, and returned the way he had gone, Mrs. Hess following.

Witherspoon emerged with the money in his pocket, and was fast drawing into the meshes of the ambush when he spied a switch engine coming down the track filled with armed men. The sight of Winchester rifles and shotguns scared him off and he dashed for the swamps. The posse went after him, some returning to Belmont to raise the alarm and wire to Fulton for dogs. After an exciting chase they caught the kidnapper, and his body at this hour is dangling in midair.

MONEY FOR ATHLETIC FIELDS.

Grout's Resolution for $300,000, Defeated Last Week, Passed Yesterday.

Controller Grout got the Board of Estimate yesterday to pass his resolution voting $300,000 for athletic fields for the high schools of the Bronx, Brooklyn, Queens, and Richmond.

Last week, when the resolution was introduced, the board declined to vote for it because of the opposition of Borough President Ahearn, who objected because Manhattan was left out of consideration. Mr. Fornes thought it was class legislation, and Alderman Sullivan said before yesterday's meeting that he never would vote for the measure. He also said if it passed the Board of Estimate it would be held up in the Board of Aldermen. But yesterday Mr. Grout amended his resolution and everybody voted for it.

Instead of providing athletic fields for the high schools in the four named boroughs the amended resolution appropriated $300,000 for four athletic fields to be administered by the Board of Education.

EXPOSES REBATE CODE.

Armour Clerk Tells of Blithesome Words That Affected Commerce.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 12.—H. Streyckmans, formerly employed by Armour & Co. as a stenographer, exposed to-day to the Inter-State Commerce Commission, at its investigation of private car lines, a secret code said to have been used by the company in conducting its business with shippers and in making rebates. Streyckmans also outlined to the commission what he declared to be discrimination by the car lines in granting rebates to certain shippers.

"What did you do while in the employ of the Armour Company from April, 1900, until August, 1904?" asked Mr. Marchand.

"Handled correspondence, ordered icing for cars, made rebate statements."

"How was this done?"

"By a cipher code."

"Is this a copy of the code?" asked Mr. Marchand, handing the witness a small book.

"Yes."

"Read from it the meaning of some of the words."

The witness read:

"Laughsome—Rebate. Launch—Better arrange rebate there. Launched—Burning the stock at both ends. Launching—Can make rebate. Laura—Handle rebate matters very carefully. Lava—Pay rebates from cash on hand—Lavealio—Rebate must be confidential. Kinsley—Shade rates a little rather than lose business. Junk—If necessary to secure shipments you can make rates to— Kaland—Meet rate by voucher. Kalatna—Meet any rate offered. Kashger—If this rate will not secure advise what is necessary. Woodpath—Inter-State Commerce Commission."

Here there was a ripple of laughter among the shippers, and the Commissioners smiled. Mr. Streyckmans continued:

"Woodprint—Avoid service of summons from Inter-State Commerce Commission. Footnote—Meet Inter-State Commerce Commission. Imprinted—Judson C. Clements of Georgia. Imprintings—J. C. Yeomans. Imprison—Charles A. Prouty. Probitas—J. W. Fifer."

When the code words standing for the name of the Inter-State Commerce Commission were read laughter and handclapping among the shippers caused Chairman Clements to rap for order.

"Did the Armours have contracts with railways for furnishing them with ice?"

"Yes."

"What were the prices paid?"

"The Northwestern billed ice at $1 a ton. That furnished by the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul was billed at $2.50, with a rebate of $1 being granted on a counter-claim. In the case of the Erie it was $1.25. This gave large profits to the Armour lines."

Streyckmans declared that former Lieut. Gov. Aldon Anderson of California paid 55 per cent. of the tariff rate on his shipments. Others said to have received more than a 50 per cent. rebate were Frank B. Buck of San Francisco, the Earl Fruit Company, the Porter Brothers Company, and the Producers Fruit Company. Stephens & Humphreys, S. R. Roper, Schnadel Brothers, George D. Kellogg, and others were declared to have received their rebates.

On cross-examination Streyckmans declared that George B. Robbins, President of the Armour Car Lines, had attempted by threats to get the papers and the code the witness had in his possession.

E. W. GOULD IN AUTO WRECK.

President of Steamship Company Badly Hurt—Mrs. Gould Uninjured.

NEW ROCHELLE, May 12.—Emerson W. Gould of Mount Vernon, President of the Mexican and Gulf Steamship Company, was probably fatally injured in an automobile accident in North Avenue last night. Mrs. Gould, although rendered unconscious, escaped practically unhurt. Mr. and Mrs. Gould started out in their car to Tuckahoe and across the rough North Avenue to New Rochelle. The avenue was clear and the auto was running at a high rate of speed. During the day a water pipe had been placed in North Avenue near the American Ice Company's storage houses, and when the trenches had been filled there was left a mound of eighteen inches across the roadway.

When the front wheels of the auto struck the mound the machine swerved, ran up on the sidewalk, jumped a stone wall, and fell over an embankment. The auto turned completely over, burying Mr. and Mrs. Gould beneath it. Help was secured, and the imprisoned automobilists were extricated. When Mr. and Mrs. Gould were rescued they were both unconscious. Dr. Sanderson was called, and he removed Mr. and Mrs. Gould to Mount Vernon in an ambulance.

To-night Mr. Gould is in a semi-conscious condition, and is under the care of his family physician and a specialist from New York. Two trained nurses are in attendance.

CARS GO THROUGH TRESTLE.

Twenty Passengers Hurt in Wreck on a Texas Railroad.

WEATHERFORD, Texas, May 12.—Two coaches of a Weatherford, Mineral Wells and Northwestern passenger train went through a broken trestle this afternoon at Dry Creek and twenty persons were hurt. The two most seriously hurt are Crawford Whitten of Fort Worth and William Cohen.

A cloudburst had raised the water in Dry Creek twenty-five feet. A log dashed against an upright, loosening it just before the train reached it. Feeling the bridge sinking, the engineer opened the throttle and saved all but two coaches. These two cars went down with their passengers.

The report was brought in by two injured men, who were hurried to Fort Worth in a special car. A relief train was sent out.

Mr. McAdoo said that they were going for a few days of recreation where there are no railroads and no mails delivered. He refused to name his destination.

DEMENTED GERMAN AT VANDERBILT HOUSE

"Count" Humored Away by Police Whom Butler Summons.

HE HAD MANY DECORATIONS

Purporting to be from European Rulers—Also Wore Several Jewels, Not Real.

The door bell of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt's residence, 1 West Fifty-seventh Street, rang in a very urgent and insistent manner at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Vanderbilt is out of the city. Dent, the butler, went to the door and found himself confronted by a man of refined appearance, well dressed, tall, about thirty-five years of age, who kept twirling a small dark mustache in an exceedingly nervous manner. The visitor handed him an engraved card inscribed: "Count Adolph Rodel."

"Take this card to Mrs. Vanderbilt without delay," he said.

"I am sorry," said the butler, "but Mrs. Vanderbilt is not at home."

The visitor spoke in broken English. He seemed to grow impatient at the answer, and, raising his voice to an angry pitch, said:

"It is a way you Americans have to deny yourselves to visitors, I know. But to me Mrs. Vanderbilt is always at home. Did I not have her as my guest at my castle on the Rhine? Did I not come across the continent at her urgent invitation to return her call and enjoy her hospitality? Take my card in if you do not wish to merit the severe displeasure of your employers."

The loud talking in the vestibule attracted several of the other servants. The butler had it conveyed to the stranger in several languages that he could not see Mrs. Vanderbilt. When one of the servants finally translated into German what the butler had said, the visitor seemed to comprehend, but nevertheless insisted that he had been invited, and intended to make himself at home.

The butler, who at first had not suspected that anything was wrong with the intruder, in the meantime had had an opportunity to size him up, and saw that his attire bore unmistakable evidences of eccentricity. He managed to convey his suspicion to the day watchman. The latter signaled to Policeman Burke of the mounted squad, who, from that moment became the most important factor in the situation next to the "Count" himself.

"I have no doubt," said the policeman, "that Mrs. Vanderbilt will be pleased to see you, but you must first see the President to make sure that your credentials are all right. It is lucky that he is in town. He has just returned from a hunting trip in the West. If you will follow me I will take you to him."

The unbidden visitor quietly followed Policeman Burke to the East Fifty-first Street Station. At the station he was received by Sergt. Ennis. Addressing the Sergeant as "Mr. President," he said that the policeman who insisted upon the formality of having his credentials vised should be severely disciplined. To this Sergt. Ennis gave hearty assent.

"This might lead to all sorts of international complications," asserted the stranger. "If Emperor William knew of this, I don't know what he mightn't do. Look at this."

He pulled a watch from his pocket with a fob attached to which hung a large silver trefoil. On the backs of the leaves were the following inscriptions in German:

"Presented to Count Adolph Rodel by the Emperor of Germany for services to the country."

"Presented to Count Adolph Rodel by King Leopold for services to the country," and

"Presented to Count Adolph Rodel by Emperor Franz Josef for services to the country."

In his cravat he wore an imitation diamond that made the Sergeant blink. Around his neck he had a wide silk ribbon, from which depended a heart-shaped filigree ornament of silver, profusely studded with imitation rubies, diamonds, and emeralds, which, he told Sergt. Ennis, was a decoration given him by King Edward. He wore five rings set with large stones. He had about $30 in bills and some loose change, besides a number of memoranda, all written in German.

No letters addressed to him were found on him, or anything by which his identity could be ascertained or his movements traced, except a baggage check from the Parker House in Boston. He told the Sergeant that he had arrived from San Francisco a few days ago, and that he had landed on the Pacific Coast shortly before from a tour around the world by way of the Far East.

Sergt. Ennis summoned an ambulance from the Flower Hospital. Dr. Nevins, who responded, said the man was mentally deranged. He was sent to the psychopathic ward in Bellevue for observation. There his case was diagnosed as "acute dementia."

7 DIE IN MINE EXPLOSION.

Forty Sticks of Dynamite Blew Up in a Montana Shaft.

BUTTE, Montana, May 12.—Seven men were killed and one was injured, probably fatally, in an explosion in the Cora mine, one of the Heinze properties, this afternoon.

The cause of the explosion is not known. Nels Wampa was carrying forty sticks of dynamite up a ladder to join companions on the hundred level when the dynamite exploded with terrific force. It is believed that Wampa accidentally touched his candle to the explosive. Wampa was blown to bits, fragments of his body being found several hundred feet away.

Two men working nearby were blown to pieces. The remains when picked up filled seven sacks. Four others 100 feet distant were instantly killed, though their bodies were not mutilated.

J. R. GARFIELD FOR CONGRESS.

Corporations Commissioner Likely to be a Candidate at Cleveland.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, May 12.—There promises to be a lively race for the Congressional nomination in J. A. Beidler's district this year. There being much opposition to Beidler's return, many Republicans are after the place. J. R. Garfield, Commissioner of Corporations, is the most frequently mentioned candidate, and it is understood that he will make the race.

The fight that Beidler made against the use of granite in the Federal Building may lose him the nomination, and Garfield is thought to be the only man who can carry the district.

MUSTANGS ALL OVER TOWN.

200 Stampeded Animals Chased by Police—Traffic Tangled Up.

A few minutes before midnight last night the Sergeant in charge of the telephone at Police Headquarters answered an urgent call.

"Say there, Police Headquarters," roared a man at the other end, "somebody's let a carload of mustangs loose and they're running all over the Twenty-second Precinct. There's more'n a hundred on 'em."

It appears that three or four carloads of the mustangs were on the way down Eleventh Avenue on the New York Central Railroad to Thirty-third Street, where they were to have been loaded upon lighters and sent to Long Island City. That was as near their destination as the police could learn.

At Sixtieth Street or thereabouts, the police said, the door on one car broke open and the mustangs leaped from the moving train. The train was moving slowly, as all trains do in Eleventh Avenue, and they got off practically in a bunch. Trimmen with ropes ran for them, and the mustangs spread in every direction.

From that minute it was horses to the north, horses to the south, horses to the east, and horses everywhere. Policeman Gilligan swore that he saw not less than three make the grandest "lep" he ever saw "man or baste make" into the North River at the foot of West Forty-third Street.

"I heard their clattering hoofs," he said, "and I thought the divil must be ridin' them. Out of the black rainy night they came rushing like the wind. They went by me like a flash—and into the North River they went."

Later it transpired that not a single carload, but seven of them numbering 200 were stampeded.

The seven cars were lined up next to a vacant lot near the foot of West Sixtieth Street. The lot is surrounded by a high board fence. A gang of hoodlums started to pelt the terror-stricken mustangs with tin cans and stones and the well-meaning trainmen with flashing lanterns undertook to quiet them. The result was a stampede of the entire lot.

Most of the animals ran up Riverside Drive to Eighty-fourth Street and, like a thundering troop of cavalry, east to Central Park West. Because of the rain few persons were in the path, and that saved any such unlucky person from injury. All but ten turned south in Central Park West. The ten went on to Harlem and were heard from as far north as the Harlem River.

The bulk of the drove went rushing down Central Park West, and, dividing as trained, encircled the Columbus Monument. One lot went on down Eighth Avenue, and several over toward Broadway. Policeman Kerrigan of the Bicycle Squad caught one utterly exhausted at Eleventh Avenue and Forty-third Street.

From midnight on policemen began to report them from all the west side precincts. Now and then one or two were captured. Strangely enough, the policemen were content to report their presence and few attempts were made to win honor medals by taking the risk of catching the fiery little steeds.

WEDDING GUESTS POISONED.

Sixty Fall Ill After a Supper—Ptomaines in Ice Cream.

Special to The New York Times.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., May 12.—Ptomaine poisoning has attacked sixty guests who attended the wedding of Roy Curtis and Miss Essie Denning of the town of Worth, twelve miles from Watertown, last evening. Physicians were summoned from every locality, and the festivities were suspended amid scenes of severest suffering.

The bride and bridegroom drove off shortly after ten o'clock to take a train at Adams. They had gone but a part of the distance to the station when the bridegroom was taken violently ill. Spasms developed and a short time later the bride also became ill. They reached a hotel and were attended there. By this morning both had recovered sufficiently to proceed on the wedding journey.

After the bride and bridegroom left the guests, who had remained for a social hour, began to fall ill; several became unconscious. Two young men were sent five miles to summon a physician. When about two miles from the physician's the messengers became so violently ill that they were compelled to seek refuge in a farmhouse.

About twenty who left at the same time as the bridal pair were taken sick at their homes. Relatives who went for physicians finally were all directed to the Denning home, where the doctors were congregated. The physicians assert that the poison was developed in the ice cream.

YACHTSWOMAN IS SUED.

Insurance Company Says It Paid Mrs. Parker for Furniture Not Burned.

An action was commenced in the United States Court yesterday by the Liverpool, London and Globe Insurance Company against Mrs. Susan De Forest Day Parker, wherein the company seeks to recover $5,800, a portion of the insurance paid Mrs. Parker for losses sustained in the burning of her yacht Scythian on June 6, 1900. The complainant makes the allegation that a portion of the furnishings of the yacht claimed to have been burned were not on the yacht at the time of the fire.

The company now alleges that the real value of the articles actually destroyed did not exceed in value $6,000, instead of $20,714, as claimed, and that it has demanded the return of $5,800, which it paid by mistake to Mrs. Parker, without result.

Mrs. Parker enjoys the distinction of being the only woman in New York holding a master's certificate, which authorizes her to navigate her own yacht in the waters of New York Bay and coastwise, and in the West Indies.

SHIP AFIRE THREE DAYS.

Kingstonian's Crew Had Desperate Struggle with Flames in Vessel's Hold

BOSTON, May 12.—The crew of the Leyland Line steamship Kingstonian, which arrived from Antwerp to-day, had a seventy-two-hour fight with fire on the voyage. The fire was caused by spontaneous combustion in the cargo of grease, rags, and cotton waste. It was only subdued by flooding the No. 2 hold of the vessel.

The Kingstonian sailed from Antwerp on April 27. At 5 o'clock last Saturday afternoon smoke was seen coming from the No. 2 hold. At one time Chief Officer Trickey and six of the crew were unconscious, but they revived soon after being taken on deck.

HERBERT CROKER DIES ON A TRAIN IN KANSAS

Police Think Opium Poisoning Killed ex-Leader's Son.

WAS GOING TO OKLAHOMA

Passengers Saw Negro Put Him on Car Helpless at Kansas City—Father May Return Again.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWTON, Kan., May 12.—Herbert V. Croker, son of Richard Croker, the ex-Tammany leader, died this morning on a Santa Fé train between Emporia and this place, and the police believe his death was due to opium poison.

From papers found in his pockets it is evident that Croker was traveling from New York City to Bliss, Oklahoma, to visit the famous 101 Ranch. He had stopped off at Chicago for the races, and had attended the Elm Ridge course races at Kansas City yesterday.

Last night about 10 o'clock Croker was put aboard a Santa Fé train at the Union Depot in Kansas City by a negro, who gave to him a purse with $17 in money and a railroad ticket. The passengers noticed that Croker was unconscious, and the conductor thought him drunk, and made no effort to take his ticket until the train was a few miles from Newton, when he tried to arouse the man, but found that he was dead.

Croker had sat quietly in his seat all the way from Kansas City, and is believed to have been alive at Emporia. It is not known just when he died.

The body was taken from the train at Newton and turned over to a local undertaker. Papers found on the body identified it, and a message was sent to Richard Croker, Jr., in New York. He telegraphed instructions to embalm the body and hold it pending his arrival.

A Coroner's inquest was begun here to-night, the conductor, the brakeman, and the porter of the Santa Fé train on which Croker died testifying. The conductor and brakeman said that there was no smell of liquor about Croker.

Croker had in his pocket a letter of introduction from J. D. Carroll and Col. Zack Mulhall of New York to Joe Miller, the owner of the 101 Ranch.

A dispatch from Kansas City says that the negro who put young Croker on the train last night was Charles Woodson, a porter at the Coates Hotel. Woodson says Croker had been drinking when he arrived at the hotel about 8 o'clock last night. After checking a small valise, Croker, the negro says, asked where there was an "opium joint." After repeated requests, Woodson says that he agreed to accompany Croker to such a resort. The police believe the negro's story.

Then they went together to a Chinese place in Sixth Street, where they remained an hour. Woodson says he then took Croker directly to the train at the Union Station. Croker's valise is still at the check stand at the hotel. The young man did not register at the hotel, and it is not believed that he went to any other hotel during his brief stay in Kansas City. Woodson tells a straight story, and the Kansas City police do not think that he was guilty of robbing or drugging Croker.

Passengers on the train took particular notice when Croker was assisted into a chair car at the Union Station in Kansas City by a young negro, because the white man was helpless, as it from liquor. The passengers heard Croker say:

"Now I want you to send me the rest of it." The negro asked Croker to write his address, but Croker refused, and finally the negro wrote as Croker dictated. The address was: "Bliss, Oklahoma, care 101 Ranch." Immediately after the train started, Croker fell into a deep sleep, snoring loudly.

The entire detective force of Kansas City and detectives for the Santa Fé Road are working on the case, endeavoring to trace Croker's movements. At the Kansas City race track his expenditures and manner were not such as to attract attention. Tod Sloan, the jockey, who formerly rode for Richard Croker and was well acquainted with Herbert Croker's brother, was at the track all afternoon, mingling with the horsemen and bettors, and he did not even hear that Croker was in town.

Herbert Croker left New York about ten days ago to pass some time on an Oklahoma ranch. Before leaving he got a letter written by Col. Zack Mulhall introducing him to friends in the Southwest, and this letter was the means of identifying the body. Croker was bound merely upon a general recreation trip, intending to make Oklahoma his ultimate destination.

Richard Croker, Jr., will bring the body East, and it will be taken to the family home at 5 East Seventy-fourth Street, to which place Frank Croker's body was borne in January after the fatal automobile accident at Palm Beach, Fla. At the Croker home last night no one could throw any light upon the cause of the young man's death.

The death of Herbert Croker is the second in the family of the former Tammany Hall chieftain within the last five months. Frank Croker was killed Jan. 21 at Palm Beach, Florida, while driving a powerful automobile along the shore. He endeavored to steer clear of a person just ahead, but the wet sand caught the wheels so firmly as to throw him out and wreck the machine. The body was brought here.

Richard Croker was cabled for, and arrived Feb. 1 on the North German Lloyd liner Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse. He remained about a month following the funeral, and then sailed back to his estate in Ireland, giving all to understand that he would probably spend the rest of his life there. It is not believed that he will cross the ocean again.

Herbert Croker was the third son of Richard Croker, and was about 23 years of age. He was at one time a student at Cornell University. Lewis Nixon offered him a place at his shipbuilding works in New Jersey, and he was there for a time.

He visited his father every year at the Croker home in Ireland. The fourth son, Howard, is now with the Tammany exchief in Ireland. A cablegram announcing Herbert's death was sent to Richard Croker last night.

As soon as the Tammany Society had installed the elected officers last night John J. Scannell moved for an adjournment out of respect to Richard Croker in his bereavement. The meeting was immediately adjourned.

BREAKING INTO WHITE HOUSE.

Man Arrested at Midnight Trying to Force Rear Door.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—A man who said his name was Daniel Constable, an Italian, was arrested by Policeman Hopkins while trying to force an entrance at the rear door of the White House about midnight to-night. He was locked up at the police station.

When questioned as to the reason for being on the White House grounds he declared a spirit entered his head and told him that his murdered wife was to be found in the White House.

The man was hatless and clad only in a coat of thin serge. He was first seen by a negro climbing over the iron fence surrounding the grounds of the White House and attention was then attracted by the sound of an attempted entrance at the near door.

He was tugging frantically at the door and shouting "Francesca, it is I." Policeman Hopkins rushed up and hurled him to the ground. Stripping off his coat, the man made a dash for liberty at the station, but was stopped, and it required six men to place him in a cell.

GUARDED FROM J. P. MORGAN.

Police Watch Italian Art Gallery He is Said to Want.

FLORENCE, Italy, May 12.—When J. Pierpont Morgan was here last April the rumor was circulated that he was negotiating for the purchase of an art gallery belonging to an old family. This report is now revived, with certain elaborations, the gallery being that of Martelli, one of the richest in art treasures in Florence, comprising famous silver works attributed to Cellini and bas reliefs by Donatello and Verocchio.

It is alleged that Mr. Morgan offered $400,000 for the collection, and that the owner asked $1,000,000. The Government, learning negotiations were in progress, ordered the police to keep a careful watch over the Martelli palace, as the art treasures contained in the gallery cannot be exported.

JONES'S BODY FOR ANNAPOLIS.

President Decides Question—Squadron to be Sent for Remains.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—At the Cabinet meeting to-day Annapolis was selected as the resting place for John Paul Jones's body. This was Secretary Morton's plan.

The argument was made that Jones's fame was a National possession, which entitled his body to a resting place in the National burying ground at Arlington. Mr. Morton's argument was that the presence of Jones's body at Annapolis would furnish patriotic inspiration to the midshipmen, and this appealed to President Roosevelt, who made the decision.

The announcement was made at the Navy Department to-day that Rear-Admiral Sigsbee's squadron would be sent to France for the body. This squadron consists of the cruisers Brooklyn, Chattanooga, Tacoma, and Galveston.

ROBBED SENATOR BURTON.

Pickpockets Stole His Wallet on Chicago Street Car.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 12.—Senator J. Ralph Burton of Kansas arrived in Chicago this morning at the Polk Street Station. With a satchel in each hand he boarded a Dearborn Street car. Four men stood behind the Senator on the rear platform. They appeared to be in a great state of mental unrest, and were arguing and gesticulating with one another, jostling the Kansan. At Jackson Boulevard the four left the car. When the conductor asked for his fare a few minutes later Burton discovered that his pocketbook was gone.

The Post Office authorities later informed the Senator that the wallet had been found in a mail box at State and Polk Streets. Currency to the amount of $55 had been taken, and two notes aggregating $1,700 had been left, together with his railroad passes.

JAPANESE SHIP HIT A MINE.

Refused Aid from Chinese and May Have Sunk.

CHE-FOO, Saturday, May 13.—A merchant vessel which has arrived here lends confirmation to the report that the Japanese transport Sheyutsu, with 1,800 tons of provisions, bound for Niu-Chwang, struck a mine on May 4 near the Miao Islands. The entire after part of the transport was blown away. The Sheyutsu signaled the merchantman that she was in distress, but refused aid when she ascertained that the merchantman was a Chinese ship.

The Captain of the merchantman says that it seemed impossible that the transport could live in the storm that was prevailing at the time, and he believes that she sank.

CONGRESSMAN ARRESTED.

Mr. Hunt of Missouri Didn't Move On and Got Ride in Patrol Wagon.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 12.—For failing to "move on" when ordered by a policeman, Congressman John T. Hunt was arrested and taken to the police station in a patrol wagon.

The Congressman was standing at the corner talking politics when the order to move on greeted him. Thinking the policeman was joking, he paid no attention to the command. The officer caught him by the arm and started toward the call box. Hunt tried to explain, but the policeman would not listen. At the station explanations were made and Hunt was released.

HYDE SUES TO DEPOSE ALEXANDER AS TRUSTEE

Story of Indecent Dance at Hyde's Ball Attributed to Alexander.

EQUITABLE CONTROVERSY, TOO

Due to His Perfidy and Desire for Control, It Is Alleged—Tarbell Called Co-conspirator.

The expected suit to oust James W. Alexander from his trusteeship of the Equitable stock left by Henry B. Hyde was begun yesterday by the service of a complaint charging him with having provoked the entire controversy in the society, in pursuance of a conspiracy to strip the stock of its voting power, destroy its value, and seize the control of the organization, for selfish purposes, through the enfranchisement of the policy holders.

The action is begun in the Supreme Court, and the plaintiffs are James H. Hyde and William H. McIntyre, co-trustees with Mr. Alexander; Mrs. Annie F. Hyde, the widow of Henry B. Hyde, and Mrs. Mary B. Ripley, her daughter. They desire trial of the action in this county.

The complaint is of considerable length, and recites, first, the conditions under which the voting trust of the Henry B. Hyde stock was established, setting forth that the defendant owes his connection with the society and his prosperity to the friendship and generosity of the elder Hyde. Upon information and belief, the plaintiffs declared that the defendant "inaugurated said conspiracy by joining with himself one Gage E. Tarbell, the Second Vice President of said society," and that "all the overt acts in said conspiracy hereinafter charged were committed with the connivance of the said Tarbell."

It was in consequence of the alleged conspiracy, the complaint continues, that Mr. Hyde, forced by the defendant in violation of his duties as trustee, made the concession toward mutualization contained in his communication to the Directors of the society at their meeting on March 14. This concession provided for the election of one-half of the Directors by the policy holders, and the other half by the stock interest; but it was subsequently changed to the twenty-eight and twenty-four division of the board, finally adopted by the Directors. Because of this and of the other acts finally adopted by the Directors. Because of this and of the other acts charged, the complainants declare that they do not believe Mr. Alexander should be allowed to resign but should be removed by the court. When Mr. Alexander wrote to Mr. Hyde recently, announcing his resignation, Mr. Hyde refused to accept it and gave notice that he would egin court action to oust him.

SAY HE INSPIRED CAN CAN STORY.

Among the acts of which Mr. Alexander is accused is the publication of "false, libelous and defamatory charges tending to destroy the good name of said Hyde and to drive him from his position." These are enumerated as follows:

"That the said James Hazen Hyde had given a masked or fancy dress ball, all or part of the expenses of which had been charged against and paid by the Equitable Society, and that at such ball there were improper and scandalous occurrences, such as the dancing of a can can on the dining tables.

"That the said James Hazen Hyde had improperly been concerned in financial operations alone or with others, and with which the said Alexander was not concerned or of the character of which he was ignorant, and that the Equitable Society had in some way suffered loss or injury through such transactions.

"That the said James Hazen Hyde had been in some way concerned in or connected with the purchase, sale, promotion, underwriting, flotation, or subscription of properties or securities of the United States Shipbuilding Company, or that the Equitable Society or one of its subsidiary companies had become involved in such transactions by reason of the connection of the said James Hazen Hyde therewith."

Answering these charges the complaint continues:

CHARGES DENIED IN TOTO.

"All of said charges are, to the knowledge of said James Hazen Hyde, and as the other plaintiffs are informed and believe, false and untrue in each and every particular, the fact, with respect to said charges being as follows:

"Said Hyde never at any time gave a mask or fancy dress ball or any other ball of which the expenses or any part thereof was directly or indirectly charged to or paid by the Equitable Society, or otherwise than out of his private and personal means. Nor were there any improper or scandalous occurrences at said ball, nor any can-can danced. Said ball was in all respects a dignified and artistic entertainment, as defendant well knew. Said story and every part thereof was a wicked fabrication invented for the purpose of injuring said Hyde in the estimation of all right-minded men, and was circulated as a part of said conspiracy. Said ball occurred on the 31st day of January, 1905, long after the preparation and circulation of said memorials, and three days before the aforesaid conference of Feb. 3, 1905, between defendant and plaintiff Hyde, to which the latter had been summoned, and said false and defamatory statements were so published immediately before said memorials were presented to the Board of Directors of the Equitable Society at their said meeting on Feb. 8, 1905, for the purpose of thereby influencing the action of said board.

ALEXANDER IN SYNDICATES.

"Said James Hazen Hyde has never been improperly concerned in any financial operation to the injury or disadvantage of the Equitable Society or at its expense. He has never been concerned in any financial transaction whatever in underwriting securities, part of an issue of which the Equitable Society has afterward purchased, except in cases in which the defendant has invariably been equally interested with him and has shared equally with him in the gains and losses of such transactions. In fact, as plaintiffs are informed and believe, when the syndicate transactions of James H. Hyde and associates occured in which Japanese 6 per cent. bonds, first series, were underwritten, plaintiff James H. Hyde, was in Europe. Participation in this syndicate was offered to defendant personally and he accepted it on behalf of James H.

Hyde and associates and personally made the allotments to members of said syndicate, allotting to himself a $250,000 participation in said syndicate and to plaintiff James H. Hyde a like amount.

"Subsequently a sub-committee of the Executive Committee of the Equitable Society, composed of defendant and one other, but not plaintiff Hyde, authorized the purchase by said society of part of the issue of said bonds, and said purchase was made while the said Hyde was still in Europe.

"Said transactions were in continuance of a custom that had existed in which the defendant had been a party and beneficiary for many years prior to the connection of the plaintiff, James Hazen Hyde with the society.

"In none of such instances was there anything improper or injurious to the society or its interests.

"The defendant has, however, for the purpose of discrediting said Hyde in public esteem, falsely, deceitfully, and maliciously caused it to be widely circulated and published that said transactions were improper and has falsely and maliciously stated or caused it to be stated in such publication that he was not concerned therein or did not know or realize the nature thereof. In truth and in fact the defendant, in all instances, received and collected a check for the same sum of money and at the same time as that received by the said Hyde on each of said transactions.

"As to the charge that said James Hazen Hyde was in any way interested or concerned in the United States Shipbuilding Company, the statement is unqualifiedly false. Said Hyde was never in any way concerned therein."

HYDE AND SOCIETY INJURED.

The result of the alleged conspiracy is thus summed up in the complaint:

"The said false and defamatory charges have had the effect of seriously impairing public confidence in said James Hazen Hyde and in the society and its management, and has affected its prosperity. The organization has been crippled, the business injured, and notwithstanding the unquestioned solvency and stability of the society, many of its policy holders have become alarmed for the safety of their investments, resulting in litigation in many of the States and demoralization among its employes. All these disastrous results and the consequent injury to the stock, of which the defendant is a Trustee, are directly chargeable to the aforesaid conspiracy of the defendant and to his perfidy in attempting for his own selfish purposes to destroy the value of the property intrusted to his care."

Elsewhere in the complaint the history of Equitable affairs the past few months is rehearsed. Mr. Alexander is accused of having obtained the signatures of officers of the Equitable to the original petition to the Directors seeking mutualization and Mr. Hyde's removal, by coercion and suppression of facts.

The responsibility for the campaign undertaken by the Crimmins Committee of Policy Holders is laid at his door, and it is alleged that the activities of this committee are directed by its counsel in cooperation with the personal counsel for Mr. Alexander. Similar responsibility is alleged for the doings of the agents at their convention here and before the Insurance Commissioner at Albany, and the charges of bad faith against Mr. Alexander made in the argument in the action of Franklin E. Lord to get an injunction restraining the Equitable's officers from carrying out the mutualization plan, are repeated, the basis for them being that the contentions of his counsel, who also represented the Equitable in that suit, were destructive of the rights of the stock of which he is a trustee. Therefore, the plaintiffs seek the removal of Mr. Alexander trustee and an accounting from him for the injury alleged to have been done to the stock by his acts.

ALEXANDER REPLIES TO CHARGES.

Counsel for President Alexander last night issued the following reply to the Hyde complaint:

"The claim that Mr. Alexander has committed any breach of trust towards Mr. Hyde under the trust agreement is utterly baseless. The object of the trust was to prevent a sale of the stock until Mr. Hyde should arrive at the age of thirty years. The legal title to the stock was placed in the trustees for this purpose. No affirmative duties were imposed upon the trustees during the existence of the trust, except the appointment of a proxy to vote for Directors and the appointment of an attorney to collect dividends. It was expressly provided by the trust deed that, as soon as James Hazen Hyde should arrive at the age of twenty-one years, 'he shall be empowered to vote upon the said shares and shall receive and hold the said proxies and powers of attorney, and the powers conferred upon the trustees under this paragraph shall be operative only in case of the refusal of the said James Hazen Hyde to act or in case of his inability or absence from the United States.'

"It is perfectly obvious, therefore, that since James Hazen Hyde has been of age the functions of the trustees under the trust deed have become purely nominal. Mr. Hyde himself having the absolute power to vote the stock and to collect the dividends thereon.

"The claim that Mr. Alexander is chargeable with some breach of duty by reason of favoring the mutualization of the company and thereby impairing the value of the stock for voting purposes is also baseless. The charter of the company provides that the insurance business of the company shall be conducted on the mutual plan. The charter itself provides the method for giving the voting power to the policyholders under certain conditions and with certain limitations. There is no question of the power of the directors by a three-fourths vote, in accordance with this provision of the charter, to give the voting power to the policyholders having policies of $5,000 and over in amount, voting in person and not by proxy. If this power were exercised, it would effectually destroy the control of the stock, since there are only 1,000 shares of stock and many thousands of policies in excess of $5,000, whose holders could vote in person.

CARRYING OUT CHARTER, HE SAYS.

"The plan of mutualization advocated by Mr. Alexander, and in part adopted by the Board of Directors, simply carries out the original design of the charter, but carries it to its logical conclusion by removing the limitation of $5,000, and by allowing the policy holders to vote by proxy as well as in person as is the case in all other corporations. Furthermore, it was always contemplated by the founders of the society, and by Henry B. Hyde himself that the mutual character of the company should be at some time put into complete operation. So far as the right to the surplus is concerned, the literature of the company during the lifetime of the late Henry B. Hyde most emphatically and consistently declared that the entire profits of the company belonged to the policy holders.

"The claim that Mr. Alexander, under the trust deed, is required at the time when the trust shall expire to use his best efforts to induce Mr. Hyde to consent to a renewal thereof is a claim which has no possible bearing upon the present situation, since the trust has not expired, and will not expire for more than a year; and if Mr. Alexander had remained a trustee nothing that he has done would have interfered with his carrying out this provision of the agreement. Mr. Alexander, however, has voluntarily resigned from the trust, as he had the right to do under the agreement, which expressly provides for cases of death or resignation. The preposterous character of Mr. Hyde's charges against Mr. Alexander in connection with this trust is further shown by the circumstance that Mr. Alexander has cast no vote in the Board of Directors which has not been concurred in by Mr. Hyde himself and by his co-Trustee, Mr. McIntyre, as well as by all the other members of the board, every resolution heretofore adopted by the Board of Directors being unanimous.

"The charge that Mr. Alexander, by advocating mutualization, has been in any way derelict in his duty, either to Mr. Hyde or to the society, is utterly unfounded. Mr. Alexander owed a duty to the society, as its President, paramount to any purely theoretical or fanciful duty which he might be supposed to owe to Mr. Hyde as an individual. Mr. Alexander found himself confronted with a situation which, in his judgment, called for radical reform. The absolute control of the enormous funds of the society and of the interests of the vast body of policy holders was vested, by reason of the ownership of certificates of stock representing a little over $50,000 in par value, in an individual.

"The future welfare of the society seemed to Mr. Alexander to demand that there should be a radical change. This danger had been rendered acute and pressing by the development within the society of conditions which appeared to involve constantly growing dangers. Under these circumstances Mr. Alexander conferred with counsel, and with some members of the Board of Directors, and was advised by them that it was not only his right but his duty to remove these dangers, and to bring about a permanent reform in the affairs of the society in the direction of giving the control of the company to the policy holders, who are the real parties in interest and the beneficial owners of the property of the company.

DECLARES ACTION SINCERE.

"Every step taken by him in this direction has been taken with a disinterested and sincere purpose on his part to bring about what he regarded, and what he has been advised to be, necessary for the protection of the beneficiaries of the society and for its future well-being and security.

"The pretense that Mr. Hyde has acted under duress in assenting to any of the steps taken by the Board of Directors in the direction of giving the right to vote to the policy holders is absurd. Mr. Hyde is of full age, and claims to be a man of sufficient ability to be Vice President of the society. He was represented by able counsel, who advised him at every step. At the very outset of the agitation of the subject, and at the first meeting of the Board of Directors at which any steps were taken, namely, the meeting held on Feb. 16, 1905, Mr. Hyde concurred in a resolution adopted unanimously by the board to the effect that it was the sense of the board that the policy holders should be given the right to vote, and that this should be carried into effect at the earliest possible date. From that time to this Mr. Hyde has concurred in every resolution adopted by the Board of Directors on this subject.

"We do not deem it necessary or proper to discuss the other matters set forth in Mr. Hyde's complaint in his suit brought against Mr. Alexander, since we regard the allegations of the complaint as merely intended to create a false impression and as utterly immaterial to the main questions involved. So far as the complaint alleges any improper conduct on the part of Mr. Alexander or those associated with him, the allegations are unfounded.

CONSPIRACY CHARGE DENIED.

"The charge that Mr. Alexander has entered into a conspiracy to destroy the value of Mr. Hyde's stock is utterly groundless. To those who know the careful consideration given by Mr. Alexander and the members of the board with whom he consulted on the subject prior to his action, the accusation seems amazing and reckless.

"Mr. Alexander had fully resolved upon his course and had become convinced of the pressing necessity for it before he consulted any of his associate officers, and the form in which the subject was presented to the board was only suggested by the practically unanimous response made by the officers of the society to Mr. Alexander's announcement of his intention and the reasons actuating him.

"The purpose of this action can hardly be to obtain relief in the courts. It merely seeks to divert attention from the vital question of giving to the policy holders the control of their own property."

The statements by William B. Hornblower, Adrian H. Joline, William N. Cohen, and Charles E. Hughes.

PRODUCE ALEXANDER CHECKS.

In connection with the assertions that Mr. Alexander was in every one of the underwriting syndicates of "James H. Hyde and Associates," it was said yesterday that the Hyde faction had given to Superintendent Hendricks, to be used in his questioning of Mr. Alexander, the eight original checks representing the latter's share of the syndicate profits in the transactions referred to by Mr. Hyde in his letter to President Alexander of April 18 last. All of these checks were indorsed by James W. Alexander, or by Henry M. Alexander, as his attorney, deposited in either the National Bank of Commerce or the Equitable Trust Company and paid to Mr. Alexander's account. With these checks were presented, it was said, letters from Mr. Alexander to Mr. Hyde acknowledging specifically the receipt of certain of the syndicate profits. Friends of Mr. Hyde said yesterday that when these checks and letters were shown to Mr. Alexander by Mr. Hendricks in the course of the examination, Mr. Alexander admitted that he was a member of the syndicates, some of which underwrote securities which the Equitable purchased.

When this was called to the attention of Bainbridge Colby, Mr. Alexander's counsel, he said:

"No one but those who have testified before Superintendent Hendricks knows what was said to him. But I am safe in saying that there is no truth in any statement that purports to make Mr. Alexander admit having knowingly participated in a syndicate that was selling its securities to the Equitable."

In further explanation of the syndicate transactions, it was declared yesterday that during the operation of "James H. Hyde and Associates" the Equitable bought upward of $200,000,000 of securities altogether, out of which amount about $13,000,000 came from syndicates in which James H. Hyde and Associates participated, Superintendent Hendricks went to Albany yesterday. He will take up the Equitable investigation again on Tuesday.

TAX RISE FOR NEWPORTERS.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, May 12.—The Assessors have increased the total valuation of real and personal property from $43,039,000 to $56,623,000, an increase of $13,584,000, more than 30 per cent., in the list for this year just completed. With the tax rate remaining the same as last year, $12 on each $1,000, the amount of tax will be increased from $516,468 to $679,476.

The increase in valuation is largely in the personal property owned by Summer colonists who claim legal residence in Newport. The increase was made after consultation with the Tax Commissioners of New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, and affects, among others, Henry A. C. Taylor, Elbridge T. Gerry, Robert Goelet and Robert W. Goelet. The individual assessments are not yet made public. It is said that the assessment on one prominent New Yorker was raised from $100,000 to $1,000,000.

Pittsfield Express Runs Into It at Open Switch—No One Hurt.

DANBURY, Conn., May 12.—A special train conveying 300 women school teachers, who had been attending the State Teachers' Convention in Danbury, was run into by the Pittsfield Express southbound here this afternoon. Both locomotives were wrecked, but no one was seriously hurt.

The excursion train stood on a spur track, and a brakeman left the switch open. The express took the switch, and the collision resulted. Fireman Boynton of the special jumped just before the crash. Traffic was blocked for hours. Passengers for New York were taken to South Norwalk in a special train.

Law of Congress Disastrous in Effect, Coroner Declares — Service for Unidentified Victims.

Special to The New York Times.

HARRISBURG, Penn., May 12.—Two more victims of the wreck of the Cleveland and Cincinnati express early yesterday died in the hospital to-day. They were Samuel S. Shubert, the theatrical mangaer, and Max Stettheimer, both of New York. This makes the known number of dead twenty-two and the injured 136.

Three bodies were identified to-day at the improvised morgue. They were Thomas Lewis of Philadelphia, conductor on one of the Pullman cars; Charles Bisinni, chauffeur, of Philadelphia, and Miss Yetta Robinson of Cleveland. Nine bodies await further attempts at identification.

All day long a procession filed by in the dimly lighted room. Some of the bodies are so badly burned that they may never be identified. A diamond ring found to-day imbedded in what might have been a hand may give a clue to one body. It once had a cluster setting. The force of the dynamite explosion dislodged all but the main stone. It is a woman's ring.

From the Morgue to the Harrisburg Hospital is but a step. From cellar to roof can be heard the groans of men and women crushed and bruised by wood and iron. Women high in the social circles of Harrisburg are giving invaluable help to the nurses.

Mr. Stettheimer died shortly after noon. With him was his brother, James J. Stettheimer. Hastening from New York was another brother, Charles, and with him one of New York's eminent surgeons.

"Good-bye, Jim; good-bye, Elks; good-bye, everybody," cried the dying man in his delirium. Several members of the local Order of Elks were at his bedside.

The finding of Stettheimer to-day was the result of a telegram received by ex-Mayor Vance McCormick, an Elk, asking him to look for the man. A delegation of Elks hunted in the ruins, then went to the hospital. All day they searched. In the evening one of the Elks was standing by a cot when a nurse slightly lifted the bandages from a man's face. It was Stettheimer.

Near where Stettheimer died are two more wreck victims unconscious and near death. They are Joseph Eberly of New York and Mrs. Anna Peters of Cleveland.

In hotels are men who were injured, but not seriously enough to demand their treatment in hospital. Hundreds of relatives and friends arrived to-day and the hotels were taxed to the utmost.

A dozen or more of those discharged from the hospital to-day visited clothing stores at once, having lost everything in the wreck, and being dependent on garments lent them to get about at all. The Pennsylvania Railroad officials had instructed a number of merchants to furnish any wreck victim who called with all the clothing he or she wished. One woman's bill was $85.

The first of the bodies was buried to-day in the Catholic Cemetery. It was the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Maroma of New York. No services were held.

The inquest has been postponed, and may not be held for a week. Coroner Krause said the crew of the freight train was so unnerved as to be unable to testify. He also said that he wished to allow the railroad officials to get all their evidence together. The Coroner's jury visited the scene of the wreck again to-day, and viewed the bodies of the two men who died.

Several wrecking trains and a force of 200 men worked all day clearing away signs of the collision. At sunset there was but little to identify the spot. The workmen found some silver coins partly melted by the heat which raged for hours after the crash.

The value of the cars destroyed is estimated at $100,000. The locomotives can be rebuilt. Coroner Krause said that the wreck was due to the fact that part of the freight train was equipped with air brakes and part with hand brakes.

"At least half a dozen minor wrecks have been caused about Harrisburg by this very thing," said the Coroner. "These long trains, part of air brake cars, are not properly manned with crews usually. The crews spend their time in the caboose and let the cars shift for themselves.

"I frequently see trains going by here with fifty hand-brake cars and ten air-brake ones. Of course, all the air brake cars have to go in front and the hand brakes behind. This many times makes it impossible to get the most heavily laden cars in the middle and the light laden ones at the ends or behind.

"The act of Congress which compelled the railroads to provide 50 per cent. of air brakes has been disastrous. It has no doubt been responsible for many wrecks that would otherwise not have happened. I intend to bring this out at the inquest. It is impossible to say just now when the inquest will be held.

"This accident was in no wise due to negligence."

Mrs. Albert J. Barr, wife of the proprietor of The Pittsburg Post, recovered from the slight injuries she received and left to-day for Pittsburg in company with Mr. Barr, who hurried here from New York as soon as he learned of the accident.

Public services over the bodies of the unidentified dead will be held to-morrow afternoon in the Market Square Presbyterian Church. Each of the bodies will be placed in a separate coffin for burial in the Harrisburg cemetery. Many of the city clergymen will officiate in the services.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—Joseph Ramsey, Jr., President of the Wabash Railroad, in testifying before the Senate Committee on Inter-State Commerce at the rate hearing to-day, referred to the catastrophe at South Harrisburg. He remarked that the freight train whose accident caused the wreck was equipped with air brakes, and said it showed that in spite of all precautions accidents would happen.

Max J. Stettheimer, who died yesterday afternoon from injuries received in the wreck of the train at Harrisburg, was a member of the firm of J. J. Stettheimer & Co., makers of shirtwaists, corner of Broadway and Spring Streets. He was a single man and lived at the Hotel Wellington. Both of his brothers, who live at the same hotel, had gone to Harrisburg when his death became known here during the afternoon.

Charles Jacobs of 28 Newark Avenue, Jersey City, who, it was feared, might be one of the unidentified victims of the Pennsylvania wreck, reached home to-day. He was a passenger on the wrecked train, but left it at Philadelphia.

HELP VICTIMS OF TORNADO

Appeal Made on Behalf of the 300 Destitute Families.

SNYDER, Oklahoma, May 12.—A relief committee, headed by E. Dowden, Chairman, was formed to-day, and the following appeal for aid was given out to-night with a request for widest publicity:

"To the People of the United States:

"This place was almost obliterated by a cyclone on the evening of May 10. The people here are dividing their all, but have not enough to relieve pressing necessity. Neighboring towns are generously supplying us with hospital supplies and food.

"Fully 300 families have been ruined by the storm, 1,500 persons are more or less dependent on the good-will of the generously inclined to tide them over the present distress. Money is urgently needed.

"Property loss, including crops, stocks, homes, and other property, will reach more than $500,000, with a portion of the stricken district yet to be heard from. Almost continuous rain since the cyclone has rendered many of the roads almost impassable.

"The stricken people have helped the less fortunate to the extent of $500 in cash, besides dividing food, provisions, and clothing with those who lost their all. In view of these circumstances, we ask assistance from the American people."

One hundred and twenty lives were lost, according to late estimates. Twenty-five were killed outside of Snyder. Ninety-five bodies have been found at Snyder, while thirty-five are missing. It is believed that twenty-five of the injured will die.

Col. Kingsbury, commandant of the Eighth Cavalry at Fort Sill, to-day made a requisition on the War Department for orders to send troops to Snyder with rations for the sufferers.

The engineering corps of the Oklahoma National Guard started to-day for Snyder with seventy-five tents to be used as temporary homes.

Gov. Ferguson's request to the people of Oklahoma to render immediate aid began to show results. Early to-day carloads of provisions, clothing, tents, bedding, and medicines began to arrive, and with them came persons from all directions to aid in attending to the immediate wants of the citizens.

Snyder lies in a basin formed by the foot hills of the Wichita Mountains. The drainage is exceedingly poor, and water is standing in large pools everywhere.

The hospital arrangements are very inadequate. During a heavy wind to-day some of the injured were conveyed on stretchers from the improvised hospital to various places. Rain began falling furiously, and the patients were drenched. The wind subsided and the injured were returned to the building from which they were taken.

All the graves dug for tornado victims are filled with water, which must be bailed out before the bodies can be buried. The burial is one of the most pressing needs. Twenty-eight bodies were in the morgue to-night awaiting burial.

J. R. Abernethy, a wolf hunter, of Frederick, who accompanied President Roosevelt on his wolf hunt, is assisting in the relief work. Abernethy was many miles from Snyder on a high promontory of the Wichita Mountains when he saw three tornado funnels sweeping everything clean. He said:

"The centre funnel did the heaviest damage. The funnel to the south merged with the centre funnel as the north fork of the Red River was crossed. As soon as these two merged the remaining one appeared to gain in velocity and moved northeast."

OKLAHOMA CITY, May 12.—J. F. Mesenbaugh, Mayor of Oklahoma City, returned from Snyder to-day, and said:

"Every building in the town is damaged, and three-fourths are good only for kindling wood. Even the grass was killed. The ground looked as if it had been run over by a big harrow.

"Those who passed through the tornado say that the full force of the storm did not last ever five minutes."

GUTHRIE, Okla., May 12.—A terrific wind and hail storm struck Marlow, I. T., this morning. Many business houses were damaged and awnings and roofs were blown off. Light structures were demolished. The Catholic church was lifted from its foundations.

SAM S. SHUBERT DIES A VICTIM OF THE WRECK

Theatrical Manager's Death Came Unexpectedly.

HIS BODY REACHES THIS CITY

Lawyer Klein on Same Train in Serious Condition—Career of Shubert, Who Began as a Newsboy.

The body of Samuel S. Shubert of the theatrical firm of Shubert Brothers, who died of injuries received in the wreck of the Cleveland and Cincinnati express at Harrisburg Thursday morning, was brought to this city last evening. The serious nature of his injuries was not known here, and his death, which occurred at the Commonwealth Hotel in Harrisburg at 9:30 o'clock yesterday morning, was unexpected. His friends and relatives here believed that his chances for recovery were good.

The funeral will probably take place tomorrow morning in Temple Emanu-El, and on that day the theatres in Chicago, St. Louis, and Cincinnati managed by the firm and usually open on Sunday, will be closed.

Considerable anxiety is felt in this city for Lee Shubert, who is in London, and after hearing the news of his brother's death broke down. The firm's representative in London cabled yesterday afternoon that if his condition would permit, Mr. Shubert would sail for home on Tuesday next.

The body of Mr. Shubert arrived at the Pennsylvania station, Jersey City, at 8:15 last evening in a special car attached to the express which left Harrisburg at 2:30 o'clock. Abe Thalheimer, the Shubert firm's booking agent, and its counsel, William J. Klein, who were also on the wrecked train, arrived with the body. Mr. Klein made the journey to this city on a stretcher.

His head was swathed in bandages, and he was carried from the car still on the stretcher. Members of the train crew said that oxygen was administered to him on the way here. He was taken to the Wilson Hospital. Abe Thalheimer, whose injuries are mostly about the hands, went home.

Others who accompanied Mr. Shubert's body were his mother, the Misses Dora and Sarah Shubert, sisters; Jacob Shubert, the junior member of the firm; Joseph W. Jacobs, the general manager; Dr. O. M. Leiser, Mr. Shubert's physician, and Sol Manheimer, manager of the Lyric Theatre.

A large number of Mr. Shubert's friends met the train at the station, among them being a large delegation of the employes of the firm.

The body was taken to the residence of the Shuberts, at 222 West Seventy-ninth Street.

Sam S. Shubert was one of the best-known theatrical managers in this city. His career was looked upon as phenomenal, considering his youth. He had not reached his twenty-eighth birthday when he died.

Born at Syracuse, in this State, he began life as a newsboy. In the daytime he sold papers, but evening was very apt to find him hanging about the theatre. Finally he got a job in a theatre selling souvenirs and programmes. His brother, Lee, embarked in the dry goods business, but very soon Sam won him over to theatrical enterprises.

Their first theatrical venture was a 10, 20, and 30 cent stock company at the Bastable Theatre, Syracuse. About this time they obtained the two plays, "A Stranger in New York" and "A Texas Steer" and made enough money out of them to start in managing theatres.

The two brothers first became managers of the Wheating Opera House and a little later of the Bastable, both in their home city. The next stride brought them to Broadway in this city. They got control of the Herald Square Theatre. Then they got the Casino, which formerly was run by the Sire Brothers, and next the Princess. They built the Lyric.

In Chicago the firm manages the Garrick in Troy the Rand and the Griswoll, and in Utica the Majestic. Recently they invaded London, getting the Waldorf, and more recently the Shaftesbury Theatre, which they leased for twenty-one years. The attractions now under their management are Fantana, Lillian Russell, De Wolf Hopper, Ada Rehan, Paula Edwards, two companies of "The Chinese Honeymoon," "The Royal Chef," "The Runaways," "The Earl and the Girl," Sarah Bernhardt, and a company of grand opera at the Waldorf, London.

Sam Schubert, like his brother Lee, was short, slight, and dark. He was very quiet and unobstrusive in manner. His most striking peculiarity was a curious stooping attitude, standing or sitting. Lee has all along stuck to the box office side of the business, while Sam planned the attractions. He was an indefatigable worker. His extreme youth and his early successes gave him the name of the "Little Napoleon" and the "Human Dynamo" among theatrical persons. The firm now controls fifteen theatres, and a year ago it was announced that the firm employed 1,200 persons and paid $65,000 a week in theatrical salaries.

NAN PATTERSON FREE; JEROME BLAMES PRESS

Says Trial by Newspapers Is Taking Place of Jury Trial.

STREET MOB CHEERS WOMAN

An Hour After Getting Her Freedom She Goes Shopping in an Automobile and Poses for Photographers.

Nan Patterson was set free yesterday after having spent eleven months and eight days in prison since that June day last year when "Caesar" Young, the bookmaker, was killed by her side in the hansom cab that was carrying both along West Broadway toward the steamship pier where Mrs. Young was vainly waiting for her husband. On motion of District Attorney Jerome she was discharged by Recorder Goff on her own recognizance.

Three times made to face a jury and twice actually tried, both times with the result that the jury declared itself unable to agree on a verdict, she is still technically under the charge of murder, but there is no likelihood that she will be subjected to another trial. Mr. Jerome yesterday prefaced his motion for dismissal by saying:

"There was unanimity in the jury room on three points—that J. Morgan Smith bought the pistol from Pawnbroker Stern; that Nan Patterson took the pistol into the cab with her; that Caesar Young did not commit suicide. In the face of these facts, a newspaper-reading jury reached the conclusion it did. I ask that she be discharged on her own recognizance, because in this county and at this time, in my opinion, any trial, with the evidence now available, would result in another disagreement."

A few minutes later the woman left the Criminal Courts Building surrounded by a squad of policemen. In the street a great crowd stood waiting, and the mob cheered her and yelled at her as she entered her carriage and was driven to the office of her lawyer, Abraham Levy, in the World Building. They pursued her again when she departed for an uptown hotel, and dropped behind only as the increased speed of the vehicle made it impossible for them to follow.

A few minutes after the woman's liberation her sister, Mrs. J. Morgan Smith, was brought before Judge Foster to hear that the indictment charging her and her husband with conspiracy to extort money from the dead bookmaker had been dismissed, and that she, too, was free. Her husband was detained to answer the charge of contempt of court, but later he was brought before Judge Cowing and fined $250. This was paid during the afternoon.

Within a short time after she has been freed Nan Patterson and her sister went on a shopping tour in an automobile along Sixth Avenue. Then she posed for a score of photographers, and told reporters how happy she was to be free, as well as how eager she was to please them because the papers had been "so awfully nice" to her. After dinner with the members of her family now in the city and her junior counsel, Daniel O'Reilly, she and her father and sister and brother-in-law left on the midnight train for Washington.

Mr. Jerome in court yesterday designated the outcome of the trial as a miscarriage of justice of the most serious kind, and he attributed it to the attitude of the press of this city toward the accused woman.

"I feel sure," he said, addressing Recorder Goff, "that a serious result has come from this trial in so far as one more step has been made in this city to substitute trial by newspapers for trial by jury. There has been a continual misrepresentation in the press of the facts and circumstances connected with this case—not on the part of those who had occasion to report the facts. But those sapient wiseacres who, in the solitude of the editorial sanctum, assume, for the benefit of the counting room end of the establishment, to conduct public affairs, have dealt with this case in a way that has aroused a feeling in this community that, in my opinion, has resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

"An illustration of the cruel and continual misstatements of this case is a remark relating to the matter of expense. Whatever money it might have cost this county could never have been called misspent if spent in an attempt to bring to justice a person thought by the prosecuting officer to be guilty. But the misrepresentations have been so gross as to be ludicrous. The case, involving practically three trials, has cost the county not to exceed $8,000.

"Gross and brutal attacks made upon my chief of staff (Mr. Rand) would have been passed over in silence had they affected me. Everything he has done and said has my entire and cordial approval. Such alleged circumstances have been paraded in the public press as that a second autopsy had been held and the fact suppressed by Mr. Rand—a brutal charge, a mendacious charge, not made, I think, with a view to harming, but caused by a growing disinclination in this community to deal with the courts of justice in the simple and decent way that happens in other jurisdictions.

"Personally, I care not for these circumstances. I think the people of this community, or those whose opinion I care for, have enough confidence in me to know that whatever has been done would not have been done but for honest belief that it was right. At the hands of the court, at the hands of his professional brethren, and at the hands of that part of the community which still believes in trial by jury and not by newspapers, my assistant needs no defense. Everything he did I would have done myself."

To these matters Recorder Goff did not refer in his reply, nor in his remarks to the woman when she was brought before him.

"Do not accept your discharge as a discharge from the indictment," he said. "This indictment, charging you with murder in the first degree, still stands against you. On each of your two trials the juries have failed to agree either upon your guilt or upon your innocence. I have no expression to make on either. But I will say that these trials must have been terrible ordeals for you to pass through, and I hope that in your future life the memory of them will tend to chasten you, and to remind you of the terrible experience you have undergone."

The Recorder then complimented Sergt. Walsh of the police squad assigned to the building on the way he handled the crowds that daily were attracted by the trial.

STOCK DEALING NOT WRONG.

Ex-President Patton Does Not Object to Trading in Futures.

Ex-President Francis L. Patton of Princeton University addressed the School of Commerce, Accounts and Finance of New York University on "Obligatory Morality," last night in the assembly room of the University Building. Dr. Patton declared that a knowledge of business was a necessity in a liberal education, and then said in part:

"Many successful business men are satisfied to say that they have done nothing the law did not allow. Plenty of men are benevolent when they get their fortunes, but I would have benevolence begin during the getting." Dr. Patton continued:

"There is the forced morality of the man in a bank who is paid only $1,000 a year, and is watched to see if he is not spending more."

In answer to questions put by the students as to the morality of dealing in stocks, particularly "futures," Dr. Patton said he could not see the evil of a

LITTELL DIVORCE INVALID.

Decision for Marguerite Lemon—Judge for Federal Divorce Law.

In deciding in favor of Marguerite Lemon, an opera singer, who sued to have annulled her marriage to J. Reed Littell, Justice Dugro in the Supreme Court yesterday said that in his opinion a uniform divorce law should be passed by Congress and that the United States Court should have jurisdiction in all divorce matters.

J. Reed Littell is a patent lawyer. He married Mabel Raum, daughter of Gen. Green B. Raum, formerly United States Pension Commissioner. They separated and Mrs. Littell obtained a divorce in Illinois on the ground of abandonment. A year later Littell married Miss Lemon.

The United States Supreme Court recently decided that the courts of one State could not acquire jurisdiction over the person of a defendant in a matrimonial action except by personal service on the defendant within the State where the suit was begun. Littell was served with the summons and complaint in this city.

Milwaukee Stockholders Assessed to Make Up Bank Shortage.

MILWAUKEE, May 12.—The Controller of the Currency has levied an assessment of 66 2-3 per cent. on the stockholders of the First National Bank of Milwaukee to make good the capital stock which was impaired by the defalcation of Frank G. Bigelow.

The assessment is based on the report of Bank Examiner C. H. Bosworth. The amount of the assessment will reach $1,000,000.

HEADS STAMP TAX BUREAU.

Charles M. Watkins of Pen Yan Named by Controller Kelsey.

ALBANY, May 12.—Controller Kelsey to-day appointed Charles M. Watkins of Pen Yan head of the new bureau necessitated by the stamp tax on stock transfers. The Controller said that several weeks' work must be crowded into a fortnight to have the new stamps ready by June 1.

No increase in the departmental force is expected, as practically all additional employes will be in service of the contractor furnishing the stamps or the designated agency for their disposal. The Attorney General has consented to take charge of all legal proceedings and prosecutions for evasion or violation of the law.

C. U. AND McCLELLAN.

Cutting's Move for Overture to Tammany Defeated Temporarily.

It became known yesterday that R. Fulton Cutting, President of the Citizens' Union, had submitted to the Executive Committee a proposal to have the Union communicate with the General Committee of Tammany Hall, with a view to ascertaining to what extent the independent course of Mayor McClellan met the approval of Tammany and what concessions Tammany would be willing to make in the direction of non-partisanship, provided the Citizens' Union were to entertain a proposal to indorse Mr. McClellan's candidacy for re-election.

It was said that Mr. Cutting's letter created such a storm in the meeting that it was withdrawn, and that the incident was regarded as closed. It was said yesterday by members of the Citizens' Union, however, that the matter might be reopened at the meeting of the City Committee Monday night. Mr. Cutting yesterday talked guardedly about the probable policy of the Citizens' Union.

ABSENTEE SACHEMS ELECTED.

Charles F. Murphy Among Them—Justice Gorman Re-elected.

Charles F. Murphy was to have been installed last night as a sachem of the Society of Tammany, but he failed to put in an appearance at the meeting of the society, held in the Fourteenth Street Wigwam. Mr. Murphy had telephoned to Secretary Smith earlier in the day that he would not return from Mount Clemens before Monday.

Mr. Murphy was not the only elected Sachem who failed to attend the meeting. Other absentees were John F. Ahearn, Thomas J. Dunn, Victor J. Dowling, Asa Bird Gardiner, Patrick Keenan, and Timothy D. Sullivan. The Sachems who were installed were John Fox, Randolph Guggenheimer, Louis F. Haffen, Daniel F. McMahon, George W. Plunkitt, and John J. Scannell. Other officers installed were Thomas F. Smith, Secretary; Peter P. Meyer, Treasurer; Bryan F. Henry, Sagamore, and John A. Boyle, Wiskinkie.

Justice James A. O'Gorman had no opposition for re-election as Grand Sachem.

"Big Tim" Tired of Congress.

Friends of "Big Tim" Sullivan yesterday spread the news along the Bowery that the leader of the Sullivan clan was tired of Washington life and had concluded to resign his place in Congress at an early date. It was also said that Senator Fitzgerald, who succeeded Sullivan in the State Senate, would resign in order to permit Sullivan to stand for re-election to his old place.

It's a strange fact that a man who would throw your gold brick at your head if you tried to sell him one will walk into a clothing store and calmly pay the price of all-wool-and-silk and accept the "mercerized cotton" cheat.

The clothier may plainly tell him it contains "mercerized cotton"; "a few threads; they look just like silk"; actually makes him think it's all right and pockets the added profit cheerfully.

Or the buyer may take the "mercerized cotton" adulteration ignorantly; there are some dealers who will let him do so.

In either case the result is the same: the wearer gets left. But he doesn't deserve any sympathy; he can have all-wool if he wants it; nobody feels sorry for a man who gets "flimflammed."

Our label means all-wool; it's a small thing to look for, a big thing to find.

GREEK'S CAP HIS PASSPORT.

American Flag on It Got Him Past "Mr. Ellis," Palapoulis Says.

Xerxes Palapoulis, a Greek, who is the proud possessor of about the funniest looking thing in the shape of headgear ever brought to the Port of New York, got here yesterday on the new French liner America from Marseilles. He brought along a lot of caps woven together of straw in many colors. One had a blue visor with hundreds of little red, green, and yellow spots stitched here and there, while another had a rough imitation of the American flag on the crown. The flag consisted of about eighteen red and white bars, while on the field of blue were three little stars, which Xerxes said represented New Haven, New London, and Hartford, Conn.

"We got the caps at Marseilles," said Xerxes, "from the smartest little chip of a man you ever saw. He said he came from England, the new, not the old England, and declared that if we were one of the caps with the flag of the great country on it, Mr. Ellis would let us in as soon as we landed in New York. We paid him 40 cents apiece for them, and sure enough, Mr. Ellis let us in very quick."

Wisconsin Business Man's Accounts Tangled, He Ends His Life.

Special to The New York Times.

OCONTO, Wis., May 12.—Louis J. Rens, one of the best known business men of Oconto, short in his account for a sum that may reach $100,000, left the city Wednesday on his bicycle, went to an abandoned barn three miles south of the city, and shot himself, dying instantly. The body was found to-day, and his accounts are being investigated.

Rens was the local agent of the McEachron Company, grain and farm produce buyers. How he spent the money is not known. Rens bought about 10,000 tons of hay from farmers on the credit of the company and sold the hay, much of the profit going to his private account.

To-day the price of men's suits is lowest of the season $11.25

BUSINESS men, professional men—doctors, lawyers, brokers, tradesmen—all in fact who wear good clothes—have learned through their fellow workers that Simpson Crawford Co. are selling bona fide $18 and $20 suits, like most well-dressed men wear, at fully one-third less than regular prices. They are $20 suits, not because we say so, but $20 suits because other stores sell the same quality, the same correct styles, the same workmanship at $20. They are suits that cannot be sold for less when bought in the regular way, as most stores buy them, and they must handle them because three-fourths of the men demand $18 and $20 suits, and they are the highest type of clothing made to sell at those prices. Second Floor.

They have all the earmarks of tailor-made clothing for which $25 is a special price. RUSSIANS IN HOT FIGHT REPEL JAPANESE ATTACK

BIG BATTLE SEEMS NEAR

Kuropatkin Criticises the System of Mobilization and Forwarding of Reinforcements.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 12.—Expectation of a land battle appears to be strengthened by a telegram from Gen. Linevitch reporting determined efforts of the enemy to roll up the Russian left at Chimiaotse.

A telegram from Kuntuleng says the Japanese are bringing forward reserves from Kaiyuan.

By The Associated Press.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 12.—Gen. Linevitch, in a dispatch from the front dated May 11, reports a series of small engagements for the possession of a pass seven miles southwest of Chimiaotse. On May 5 the Russians retired to Chimiaotse, and on May 6 fighting was resumed and lasted all day long. The result was indecisive.

Simultaneously detachments were engaged seven miles from Ufangu. The Japanese advanced up to the Russian bayonets, but were repulsed. The night of May 6 the Japanese were reinforced, and the Russians commenced to retire.

On May 7 a third Russian detachment advanced to Tavangu Pass and met the Japanese, against whom the former operated successfully for possession of the pass. On May 7 the Japanese resumed a decisive offensive against the Russian right flank, but were repulsed.

GADGEYADANA, Manchuria, May 12.—Gen. Kuropatkin, in conversation with The Associated Press to-day, criticised the system of mobolization and the forwarding of reinforcements, claiming that better results would be obtained by completing the units at present in the field than by sending new corps to the Far East.

The General declared that the authorities are picking the most undesirable of the reservists and instanced the case of the Tenth Corps, alleging that when it was mobilized, instead of drafting the youngest reservists who had been called into service, the oldest classes were chosen. He said further that when the Seventeenth Corps arrived in Manchuria it had but a third of the proper complement of officers and that many of these were very undesirable, having apparently been shipped off as a riddance.

The General expressed the view that unattached troops should be embodied into the units already in the field, in accordance with the experience of officers who had seen the service. This course, he added, would effect a great saving in transportation, as a corps of 25,000 men with its baggage and trains required the same number of cars as 100,000 men to fill the ranks of corps already in Manchuria.

Gen. Linevitch has instituted company and battalion drills to practice passing wire entanglements and abattis as well as marksmanship and other exercises to improve individual efficiency.

NEUTRALITY PERIL NOT OVER.

Possibility of British Intervention Still Discussed in Russia.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 12.—It is asserted at the Foreign Office that no further developments are expected regarding the neutrality of France so unceremoniously imperiled by Rojestvensky.

The Foreign Office declares, however, that it is without knowledge of his or Nebogatoff's movements, and admits that until they finally leave French waters the danger of a diplomatic conflict cannot be considered as over.

Foreign Office circles freely discuss the possibility of British intervention in defense of Japan in case the latter chooses to regard France's action as a casus belli.

Such an eventuality would delight the Russian Chauvinists, whose hopes of repairing the damaged prestige of their country amid a general conflagration would thus be unexpectedly fulfilled.

By The Associated Press.

TOKIO, May 12—10 A. M.—France's latest assurance of neutrality eases the situation somewhat, but does not remove the popular sentiment against her.

The press urges the Government to maintain a strong attitude toward France and demand explanations, saying that it is necessary that France explain events between May 3 and May 9.

RUSSIAN FLEET ORGANIZED.

Nebogatoff's Command No Longer a Separate Division.

ST. PETERSBURG, Saturday, May 13.—Since the arrival in the Chinese Sea of Rear Admiral Nebogatoff, who is the junior Admiral in the Far East, his command is believed to have ceased to exist as a separate division. The fleet is now divided in three squadrons, Vice Admiral Voelkersam, who is second in rank to Vice Admiral Rojestvensky, being in command of the battleships and Vice Admiral Enquist, in command of the heavy cruiser squadron. Nebogatoff has been placed in charge of an information squadron of scouts and converted merchantmen.

The Admiralty declines to divulge any information which it has about the ships of the Vladivostok division, which are reported to be off the coast of Japan, but the impression prevails in naval circles that acting under the instructions of Vice Admiral Rojestvensky they have passed through Tsugaru Straits into the Pacific on a reconnaissance to ascertain if the passage is free of mines and feasible for Rojestvensky's squadron, and also to threaten Japanese commerce.

M. Vronski, the military expert of the Novoe Vremya, explains that the failure of Field Marshal Oyama to undertake an advance, as well as the failure of the Japanese to send an expedition to the Island of Sakhalin, is due to the appearance of Rojestvensky's squadron in Chinese waters.

"In his hands now is the destiny of the Far East," the paper says. "May God grant him success!"

BLAMES JEWS FOR RIOT.

Russian Authorities Also Accuse Revolutionaries at Zhitomir.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 12.—Some private reports from Zhitomir, capital of the Government of Volhynia, Southwest Russia, place the number of persons killed as high as forty.

The official account attributes the outbreak largely to the attitude assumed by the Jews and revolutionary agitators. The Jews are accused of using a portrait of the Emperor in shooting practice.

"The Minister of the Interior," says the statement, "has received news of cases in which Jews have insulted and even beaten women. The Christians are greatly incensed and excited. Besides this the Social Revolutionists have scattered proclamations telling Jews that a massacre is contemplated. Everything shows that the cruelties were perpetrated under the influence of the Revolutionists, which is embarrassing the authorities in preventing encounters between the Jews and the Christians.

"The Governors have been instructed to urge the better class of Jews to persuade their co-religionists by their conduct not to excite hatred against themselves."

LODZ, Russian Poland, May 12.—The bakers here have struck, and no bread can be secured in town. Neighboring villages are sending supplies. Some of the largest mills in Lodz are closed. The domestic servants also have gone on strike.

HOW TO AVOID REVOLUTION.

Evolution in Russia Likely Unless Repression Is Resorted To.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 12.—The Zemstvo Congress which has just terminated its labors at Moscow showed clearly that an appeal to popular suffrage affords the sole method of unraveling the tangled skein of the Russian political situation.

The Marshals of the nobility are now conferring at Moscow with representatives of the reform parties with a view to co-operation against the forces of reaction.

On the whole, the outlook, though gloomy, is not as desperate as is generally thought by foreign critics, and unless the Government introduces sweepingly coercive and repressive measures the chances are in favor of evolution, not revolution.

ITALY'S BALKAN POLICY.

Tittoni Says Annexation of Crete to Greece Cannot Be Conceded.

ROME, May 12.—In the course of the discussion of the foreign budget in the Chamber of Deputies to-day Foreign Minister Tittoni made a statement regarding the general foreign policy of Italy, one of the chief points of which was that it was impossible to concede the annexation of Crete to Greece because of the effect it would have in the Balkans.

The Minister said that the Triple Alliance represented a pledge of peace, while his meeting with Count Goluchowski, the Foreign Minister of Austria-Hungary, at Venice afforded fresh proof of complete accord with Austria, which had manifested itself especially in Macedonia, where reforms were progressing.

The organization of the gendarmerie having been intrusted to an Italian General, he regarded it as of great service; but the most important success consisted in having Macedonian finances placed under the control of the powers, while Italy and Austria were agreed that the Albanian vallyeets now annexed to Macedonia and causing constant troubles should be returned to Albania.

FREED BY DAUGHTERS' PLEA.

Little Girls Obtain Father's Release After Talk to Judge.

The two little daughters, aged respectively twelve and fourteen years, of William Sinnott, an engineer, of 170 West One Hundred and Second Street, who was on trial before Judge Newburger in Part IV., General Sessions, on the charge of passing a bad check on a saloon keeper, saved their father yesterday from a prison sentence.

Judge Newburger saw the two little girls in court, and asked what they were doing there.

"Our papa is in trouble," said the eldest girl. "He is always good to us, except when he drinks too much. We hope nothing bad will happen to him."

Judge Newburger found on inquiry that Sinnott had repaid the amount of the worthless check, and that the offense was his first. He released the engineer on his own recognizance.

SEPARATION FOR W. H. DONNER

Pittsburg Capitalist Gives His Wife $100,000 and $5,000 Annuity.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, May 12.—William H. Donner of Pittsburg, whose wealth is estimated at $5,000,000 to $10,000,000, has separated from his wife and has taken possession of their three children. It is said that Mrs. Donner has been given $100,000 in cash and has been guaranteed $5,000 a year as long as she lives.

Before leaving for her former home at Columbus, Ind., to-day, Mrs. Donner admitted that she had been given $60,000, but her attorney declined to say anything regarding the annuity.

Donner and his wife have been married seventeen years. He is President of the Union Improvement Company. Some years ago he was President of the Union Steel Company, which was absorbed by the Sharon Steel Company. His share of the sale was about $3,000,000.

NEW ORLEANS TERMINAL PLAN

$4,000,000 to be Spent on Proposed Great System.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, May 12.—It was announced here to-day by James Stewart of James Stewart & Co., the contracting firm that built the London subway, that the New Orleans Terminal Company, backed by the Rock Island-Frisco system and by the Southern Railway, would have the very finest system of shipping facilities in the world, and that the total outlay would be approximately $4,000,000.

Mr. Stewart has just returned from a seven weeks' tour with Capt. Hinckley, chief constructing engineer of the New Orleans Terminal Company, through the chief seaports of Europe. As a result of this trip, Mr. Stewart said Mr. Hinckley would recommend—and his recommendation would be accepted—that the original plans for the New Orleans terminals should be doubled in their scope.

HAD HUSBAND'S CAFE RAIDED.

Mrs. Ferris of Stamford Insisted on the Enforcement of Law.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn., May 12.—Mrs. Frelinghuysen Ferris, engaged jointly with her husband in conducting the Stamford House, a hotel, caused the police to raid the place last night. Mrs. Ferris returned from a shopping trip to New York after midnight and found the café open. She went out into the street, found Policeman Button and Special Officer Aiken and demanded that they arrest every man in the café.

The officers found two business men and a detective in the place. There was evidence only of a technical violation of the law, and none of the men was held.

TEXAS RAILROADS' QUANDARY.

Eastern Bondholders Confer with Representatives of the Roads.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, May 12.—Representatives of Eastern bondholders held a long conference in St. Louis to-day with lawyers representing practically every railroad operating in Texas in an effort to arrive at a better understanding of traffic conditions in the Lone Star State.

Recent rulings of the Texas Railroad Commission have brought the rate for carrying cotton and other commodities to such a point that nearly all the roads in that State have found it impossible to meet fixed charges and operating expenses with their income.

The bondholders desired further information, and the meeting here resulted. Representatives of the Mercantile and Central Trust Companies of New York and of several large individual bondholders came to St. Louis to meet the men from Texas. After the conference lengthy telegrams were sent to the Eastern people stating the case fully, and replies are expected to-morrow, when the conference will be resumed.

The men managing the Texas railroads are of one mind in declaring that if any action is to be taken in the courts against the Railroad Commission it must be by the managers of the property.

Judge A Tree By Its Fruit

Eleven years ago we planted the Regal idea in New York. It took root in a soil that was waiting for it, flourished like a hardy sprout in rich loam, and produced—one prosperous Regal store.

We nourished the young tree with business honesty and faithfulness; we gave it every advantage of the now famous Regal System. The tree couldn't help but grow.

Another store came—and another—and another.

To-day the Regal tree has covered entire Greater New York with branches fruitful with opportunity to shoe buyers.

There are now 28 Regal Stores in the Metropolitan District, 11 of them exclusively for New York women, the most fastidious dressers in the world.

Several of these stores are clustered about the world's financial center, Wall St.—famous for its well-dressed men.

Two of our best appointed men's stores are at 43 Cortlandt St. and 167 Broadway, between Cortlandt and Liberty Sts.

Those at 305 Broadway, cor. Duane St., 102 Nassau St., cor. Ann St., and 785 Broadway, cor. Tenth St., have handsomely appointed departments for both men and women.

Almost everywhere in the better districts where a Regal store would be convenient to you, you will find one.

Over half a million New Yorkers depend upon Father Knickerbocker's Regal Tree for their shoe service. It offers them for $3.50 the most enduring materials and the most fashionable styles procurable at any price.

New York's Finest Showing Of Women's TAILORED SUITS

Last year in May we did such tremendous selling in Women's Costumes and Wraps that we thought we had set a mark that would be hard to equal again, for the weather and so many things favored that particular month. But splendid as the record was, the first half of the present month has eclipsed the same period last year. But ordinary merchandising could not accomplish this result.

We have been working with manufacturers, planning new models for dresses, bringing out new styles, showing the possibilities of fabrics that were not realized by others, and securing prices that are unmatched for lowness anywhere else.

It has not been a mere dragging of the market for bargain lots, for these splendid values have been on newly designed and newly tailored garments, fresh from the best manufacturers in the country. This unusual effort and extraordinary accomplishment have been appreciated by New York women. That is why the results have been so handsome.

Today, instead of winding up many of the Spring stocks, we are presenting beautiful new models in Women's Tailored Suits that are especially designed for Summer wear. They have all the smart, stylish character of women's tailored dresses, and are made of cool, lightweight and light-colored homespuns that exactly suit the warmer season.

The suits are made up in three models, entirely new in designs, as follows:

One style has a coat 42 inches long, with fly-front, loose back belted; patch pockets; seams felled; embroidered collar and cuffs; skirts are full plaited.

Another model has tight-fitting coat, 42 inches long; lapped seams, and an attractive effect is produced by the sharp contrast of the black velvet collar and buttons. The coat is lined to waist with taffeta silk; the skirt is full plaited.

The third model has tight-fitting coat, 42 inches long, with shawl collar and cuffs of linen; buttons come through. Lined to the waist with taffeta silk; full plaited skirt.

All Fifteen Dollars a Suit

We also offer today a group of fifty-eight stylish Homespun Suits—remaining lots of recent models—youthful in style, and now in stock only in the smaller sizes, at $12 a suit.

ROOSEVELT IN CHARGE, TAKES UP BOWEN CASE

Taft Makes Report and President Will Conduct Inquiry.

CANAL LABOR CABINET TALK

Decision Against Eight-Hour Day Expected—Shonts Declares That Obstacles Will Be Overcome.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—Secretary Taft took himself off the lid at 9 o'clock to-night when he went to the White House and gave the President a full report of all that had been done in his absence.

A very large share of the report was given over to the Loomis-Bowen affair. Mr. Bowen's charges and the other documents in the case were submitted.

Mr. Loomis has indicated that his written statement will be ready for the President by to-morrow or next day. When it is received the President will compare the two statements, and then, on Monday, will be ready to take up the case.

Secretary Taft has ordered Mr. Bowen to be here on Monday to furnish the President with any information he may desire, and Mr. Bowen has replied that he will arrive in Washington on Sunday. Mr. Roosevelt has given no indication whether he intends to summon the two men before him or whether he will decide the case on written evidence. His conduct of similar cases in the past, however, leads to the belief that he will examine both personally.

The President made his appearance in the executive office at 10 o'clock this morning, and immediately took up routine. There were few callers during the day. Before the Cabinet meeting, Vice President Fairbanks had a short talk with the President. Gov. Cummins of Iowa made a brief social call.

Senator Kean of New Jersey extended an invitation to attend the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the battle of Elizabethtown on June 7. The invitation was declined, as the President has decided not to leave Washington until Memorial Day, when he will speak at the unveiling of the statue of Gen. Slocum in Brooklyn.

The President will leave Washington for the Summer on June 20. Before going to his home at Oyster Bay he will attend commencement at Harvard and at Clark University, Worcester, of which Carroll D. Wright, formerly Commissioner of Labor, is President.

When the Cabinet assembled at 11 o'clock the President was greeted cordially. Congratulations were extended on the patriotic reception of the President in every section.

Secretary Taft conferred with the President regarding the status of public business before the other members reported. Secretaries Hay and Wilson were the only absentees. The Cabinet meeting continued for two hours.

Attorney General Moody discussed tentatively the question whether the eight-hour labor law should be held to apply to laborers on the Panama Canal. He did not express a final opinion, but made a full statement of the reasons for and against the eight-hour day on canal work.

It is expected among the law officers of the War Department and the Department of Justice that the Attorney General's opinion will be adverse to the application of the eight-hour law.

CHICAGO, May 12.—Theodore P. Shonts, President of the Panama Canal Commission, left to-day for Washington. He will go soon to Panama, to remain permanently. He said:

"I have found out that, while the building of the canal is a stupendous project, it is by no means one which cannot be conquered and put through to a successful finish. As a matter of fact, there are just three principal propositions, and I enumerate them this way.

"Climatic conditions. The solution of this lies in sanitation. We will have the greatest sanitary experts in the world associated with us, and I am sure that we will overcome the climate.

"Labor. The solution for the difficulties involved in securing enough of the right kind of labor lies in fair treatment, fair wages, and enforced sanitation.

"The engineering problem. This is not, perhaps, more difficult than others that have been put through successfully. Its immensity is the only staggering thing about the project. The same organization and the same forces applied to this project that are used in less gigantic enterprises of the same kind, but on a similarly large scale, will, in my opinion, make a successful job."

YELLOW FEVER IS CHECKED.

Panama Outbreak Was in Headquarters—Delay on Buildings to Blame.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—That the yellow fever epidemic among Panama Canal employes never would have gained such headway had energy been shown in constructing proper quarters for the unacclimated Americans is intimated by Government officers. The arrival of lumber was unaccountably slow, and the quarters have not yet been constructed. The employes have been using the unsanitary old buildings.

The centre of the epidemic is in the main Government building, occupied by Gov. Davis, where it started. The victims were clerks in the offices.

The building has been fumigated, and the epidemic, it is believed, is under control. No new cases have been reported since May 3. Within four months, the authorities here say, yellow fever will be stamped out of the canal zone for all time.

Some valuable lives have been lost, and thirty men have fled from the zone. The responsibility for holding up the lumber has not been fixed, but it was for things of this kind that President Roosevelt summarily removed the old commission.

Gov. Magoon and Chairman Shonts are to start for the Isthmus on May 16.

Col. Gorgas, Acting Governor, to-day repied to a cabled inquiry as follows:

"Names of yellow fever patients: T. C. Aubrey, Gustave Newbury, Mike Doty, A. E. Benners, T. J. Butler, H. Carrington, N. M. Barrett, A. Philpots; foregoing employed in the United States; Charles Leask, from the United States, employed in the installation of the Ancon Hospital laundry; Robert Stewart, employed on Isthmus; Cruzette Perlaine, non-employe; John Wickham, non-employe, at Colon."

Cassini's Transfer Gazetted.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 12.—The transfer of Ambassador Cassini from Washington to Madrid was officially gazetted this morning, under date of May 9, but the appointment of Baron de Rosen to succeed Count Cassini at Washington has not yet been gazetted. Emperor Nicholas is awaiting a formal notification that Baron de Rosen is persona grata to the United States before signing his decree of nomination.

Hengelmuller Wants to Stay Here.

BUDAPEST, Hungary, May 12.—Mr. Hengelmuller, Ambassador of Austria-Hungary to the United States, in an interview with The Associated Press to-day asked that most emphatic denial be made of the report published in the United States that he is seeking transfer to a European post.

Blaze in Thirty-fifth Street Mastered with Difficulty.

Fire which started a little after 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon destroyed three connecting buildings occupied by Jonas & Naumburg, hat manufacturers, at 518 to 522 West Thirty-fifth Street. The blaze was said by the Fire Department to be one of the hottest and fiercest with which it has had to contend in many years.

More than a hundred girls employed in the Jonas & Naumburg factory were trooping out of the building for luncheon when the fire started in the drying room, which is in the basement of one of the two wings of six and four stories, respectively, adjoining the old three-story building.

It is believed that felt, still damp with the chemicals used in molding and stiffening hats, caught fire. Immediately a puff of black smoke arose from the basement. Persons in the neighborhood thought there had been an explosion, but no one heard any noise.

The blaze was so sudden and unexpected that for some time the girls still in the factory were huddled together in a panic. Policeman Kerr was at Tenth Avenue, and turned in an alarm, after which he ran to the building and assisted Policeman Ginnane in quieting the girls and getting them out of the building. Several of them were so frightened that they had to be carried out. John Burke, a milk wagon driver, who works across the street, saw a woman at one of the second-story windows staring at the fast spreading flames and screaming hysterically. He ran into the building, and despite her resistance, carried her to the street.

Water pressure on the Thirty-fifth Street side was inadequate. The flames then leaped half way across the street and caused such heat that the firemen were unable to approach too closely. About eighty girls employed in a branch factory of R. H. Macy & Co. in No. 517 were compelled to leave the building, as were the men in the Sprague Electric Company's works and the Fox Iron Foundry, and the people of the tenements on each side.

A fourth alarm brought more apparatus, and ambulances from the Roosevelt and New York Hospitals. The hat factory burned itself out with great speed and fury, but the adjoining buildings were saved after an hour and a half of hard work.

Fireman Michael Nichols of Truck 4 was the only man injured. He was climbing a ladder on the Thirty-fifth Street side when a sudden pressure of water wrenched the hose nozzle from the hands of another fireman above. The big pipe swirled in the air like a serpent for a moment, casting a cloud of water over the spectators, then fell, striking Nichols as it dropped. He was half stunned, and clung from the ladder by one hand. His comrades grabbed him and took him to a place of safety.

The total damage was estimated at $100,000.

GAS DIVIDENDS LOWERED.

Albany Campaign and Fear of Cheaper Price Causes Retrenchment.

As a result of the campaign against the Gas Trust at Albany this year, the Directors of the Consolidated and the Brooklyn Union Gas Companies yesterday reduced the dividends on their stocks, which were payable for the current quarter. Announcement of the reduction of the Consolidated Gas dividend was made before the opening of the stock market yesterday and consequently the stock of the company opened weak and remained so almost all day, closing near the lowest at 187 on heavy transactions. The stock was placed on a 10 per cent. basis last year, paying 2½ per cent. quarterly. Before that it had paid 8 per cent. The dividend now declared is only 2 per cent. quarterly, or at the rate paid before last year. The dividend is payable June 15.

None of the Directors yesterday would give a reason for the reduction, but Wall Street assumed that it was due to the expectation of a reduced price for gas. On the part of the company it was said that with 75-cent gas they would not be warranted in paying a 10 per cent. dividend. The reduction of the dividend makes a difference of $1,600,000 a year in dividend requirements. There is $80,000,000 of stock outstanding.

The announcement that the Brooklyn Union Gas Company had reduced its dividend was made shortly before noon. The stock of the company had not been active, but on the sale of a 100 share lot it declined 10 points to 190. The dividend of the Brooklyn Union Gas Company was raised to a 10 per cent. basis in May, 1904. As there is $15,000,000 of stock outstanding the reduction of the dividend means a saving of $800,000 a year. Before May of last year the Brooklyn Union Gas Company had paid 8 per cent. dividends since 1900. Before that time it had paid 6 per cent.

CZAYKOWSKI SLIPS AWAY.

Turkey Orders from France Man Bailed on Swindling Charge.

PARIS, May 12.—The lawyer representing the bankers who are prosecuting Count Czaykowski (Rechid Bey), from whom his wife, who was Miss Edith L. Collins, of New York, ward of Senator Depew, got a decree of separation last November, and who was recently arrested charged with obtaining money under false pretences, had presented a statement to the Minister of Justice saying that the Count had left France pending the proceedings owing to the intercession of the Turkish Government, and protesting against foreign interference in French legal procedure.

Count Czaykowski, who was formerly Secretary of the Turkish Legation at The Hague, was arrested on the charge of obtaining money under false pretences from Patusset & Loisier, bankers of Paris. The latter alleged that the Count secured an advance from them in order that he might proceed to the United States and claim $20,000,000 which he said he had inherited from a Boston relative named Clarke.

STICKNEY WANTS RATES FIXED BY COMMISSION

Chicago Great Western President Tells of Rebate Ruse.

ATTACKS FREE PASS SYSTEM

Says President Should Set Example of Obeying the Law Against It—Senators Hear More Testimony.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—A. P. Stickney, President of the Chicago Great Western Railroad, has filed with the Senate Committee on Inter-State Commerce a statement in favor of giving the Inter-State Commerce Commission power to fix rates. His paper is largely a repetition of a speech he made before the Washington Economic Society on Feb. 3. He says that the commission would be the most satisfactory arbiter possible.

Speaking of rebates, he says that "since the injunctions, the traffic Directors have stopped paying rebates on grain shipments, but in lieu thereof have paid elevator fees, which is another way of giving rebates."

A Government commission would be untrammeled by competition or a desire to secure tonnage for any particular line, and could frame an equitable schedule. He thinks the commission should be allowed to fix minimum as well as maximum rates or discriminations could not be prevented.

Mr. Stickney criticises the free pass system.

"As an individual rule of action the law against free passes," he says, "was ignored by the Congressmen who passed it and by the President who approved it, and subsequent Congressmen and Presidents, with rare exceptions, have ignored its provisions. Traveling present the evidence of their misdemeanor before the eyes of the public in a way which indicates no regard for the law. The Governors of the States, many of them Judges—in short, all officialdom from the highest to the lowest—the higher clergy, college professors, editors, merchants, bankers, lawyers, present the evidence of their misdemeanor in the same manner."

He says that the one man whose example would be effective in arousing people to a sense of their duty to obey the anti-pass law is President Roosevelt.

President Joseph Ramsey, Jr., of the Wabash Railroad was again a witness to-day, opposing the proposed railroad rate legislation. The advocates of the proposed legislation, he contended, did not want maximum rates, but desired a rate for the benefit of their particular localities.

James F. Parker of New York spoke in opposition to the rate-making power being conferred on the Inter-State Commerce Commission.

"From the point of view of one engaged in the grain business for about thirty years in New York, and from experience as Chairman of the Committee on Trade and Transportation of the New York Produce Exchange," he said, "it is my personal opinion, and the opinion of my committee, and of a large number of representative members of the Exchange which we represent, that it would, in principle, be wrong to confer rate-making powers on this commission."

A number of shippers also testified in opposition to granting the commission power to fix rates. Nearly all of them said the railroads treated them fairly, and they did not desire Governmental interference.

BRAUN REPORTS HIS CASE.

Washington in Doubt About Status of His Mail in Hungary.

BUDAPEST, Hungary, May 12.—American Special Immigration Inspector Marcus Braun of New York, who has been fined $10 here on charges that he threatened a Police Department detective whom he alleges was tampering with his mail, declares the police stories concerning his antecedents in Hungary are fictitious.

He has reported the incident to the authorities at Washington through the American Embassy.

Consul General Chester requested the Chief of Police to make inquiry into the matter of Braun's treatment. This the Chief declined to do, but explained that he had not ordered a detective to watch Braun. The detective's own statements, however, show that Braun was shadowed.

Astonishment is expressed here at the proceedings of the Hungarian authorities against Braun, which are declared to be a violation of international rules for which satisfaction must be forthcoming.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—Ambassador Storer has reported to the State Department that Hungarian officials have been opening the mail of Marcus Braun, one of the special Immigrant Inspectors of the Department of Commerce and Labor, who has been engaged in conducting an inquiry for the department in Budapest.

If Mr. Braun were attached to the American Embassy there could be no question of the inviolability of his mail, but his status as an Immigrant Inspector is rather vague, and the officials here are not clear as to the right of protest in such a case.

BIG RAILROAD SYSTEM PLAN FOR PHILIPPINES

Taft Consults with Cromwell About Financing Enterprise.

HILL AND MORTON CALLED IN

Scheme Provides for Standard and Narrow Gauge Roads Beginning on Island of Luzon.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—William Nelson Cromwell, representing a syndicate of American capitalists, interested in railroad investment in the Philippines, had a long interview with Secretary Taft today. It is understood that Secretary Taft has formulated a plan for a large railroad system to begin on the Island of Luzon.

Secretary Taft has counseled with several railroad experts, among them Secretary Morton and James J. Hill, and he has framed specifications on which the proposed system is to be financed and constructed. It embraces a series of both standard and narrow gauge roads all combined in one great system calculated to supply to the undeveloped resources of the islands a means of transportation to market.

The syndicate objects to many of the conditions laid down by Mr. Taft. The capitalists do not think it would be wise to build narrow gauge roads in the archipelago, but that it would be better to go slower and build standard gauge roads, and these only as fast as the business demands might require.

The specifications drawn by Secretary Taft have not yet been made public. President Hill of the Great Northern has suggested to Secretary Taft many changes in his plan, and Mr. Cromwell to-day urged that the whole plan be liberalized in many ways both as to the character of the roads and as to the financing of the project. It is understood that the syndicate wishes the Secretary to consider the American plan of development by land grant inducements.

After completing the cure the Secreary will leave Bad Nauheim for Paris, May 21, and thence will go to London, sailing for the United States, June 7.

Mr. Hay informed Mr. Eddy that there is no truth in the reports that it is his intention to resign the Secretaryship of State.

CARNEGIE OBLIGES KING.

Edward VII. Wanted the Skeleton of a Diplodocus for Britain.

LONDON, May 12.—In the Natural History Museum this afternoon Andrew Carnegie presented to the British Museum the cast of the skeleton of a diplodocus, the original of which is in the Pittsburg Museum of Natural History.

Among those present were the Archbishop of Canterbury, Lord Avebury, President of the Society of Antiquaries; William J. Holland, Director of the Carnegie Museum at Pittsburg; John Morley, M. P., and James Bryce, M. P.

In a brief speech Mr. Carnegie said the museum owed the gift to King Edward, who when at Skibo Castle remarked that he hoped Great Britain would some day possess the skeleton of a diplodocus, and much gratification was felt in America at that country being able to add to the attractions of the British Museum.

The cases which brought over the cast of the diplodocus are going back to Pittsburg filled with valuables from duplicate articles in the British Museum.

MURPHY FOR CHEAP GAS, SAYS SENATOR FOLEY

Issues Statement Explaining Vote on 80-Cent Measure.

MAYOR'S TELEGRAM TOO LATE

Would Not Support Republican Bill, Because It Tended to Build Up State Machine.

Although Charles F. Murphy, the leader of Tammany Hall, did not return from Mount Clemens yesterday and afford the public the promised light as to the position of the Tammany organization with respect to cheap gas, one of the Tammany Senators who voted against the Eighty-Cent Gas bill, Senator Foley, gave out a statement explaining his attitude and vote. In this statement Senator Foley said:

"There is nothing in connection with the position which I took on the gas legislation for which I think I owe any apology or which I am not ready and willing to explain.

"I see by the papers that there are some people who are inclined to question the sincerity of Mr. Murphy's declaration before he departed for Mount Clemens that he was in favor of cheap gas. Anybody who knows Mr. Murphy cannot misunderstand what his position was on the question of cheap gas throughout the session of the Legislature. Every member of the delegation from New York City with whom he might exercise any influence knew then, and knows now, that Mr. Murphy was working honestly and sincerely to bring about a reduction in the price of gas, and that in order to secure a real reduction, was desirous of having passed a bill fixing the price and giving to the local authorities the power to regulate pressure and inflict fines whenever the quality should fall below the legal standard.

"It was to that end that I introduced a bill for 75-cent gas, which conferred upon the local authorities the power to regulate pressure and quality. Several hearings were had on my bill, but it was impossible to get the committee to report it. The agitation brought about by reason of the introduction of my bill compelled the Republicans to take cognizance of the demand for relief, and I think brought about the appointment of the investigating committee.

"The minority in the Senate was unalterably committed to a cheap gas bill, but when the Republican majority with thirty-six Senators—ten more than are necessary to pass a bill—all of whom were in caucus on the matter, attempted to coerce me in voting for an 80-cent gas bill with a string tied to it, I rebelled and offered as a substitute my 75-cent gas bill, which reserved to the people of the City of New York local control over an absolutely local situation. My offer was spurned. The only condition upon which the Republicans were willing to give the people of the city cheap gas was that the control of the local lighting companies should be handed over to a Republican State machine. To that unfair proposition I could not give my consent.

"In considering the gas question as presented to the Legislature, it must be borne in mind that the bill to reduce the price of gas was but one of a series of bills with relation to lighting, and that the most important measure of the series was the bill to establish a State Gas and Electricity Commission, into whose tender and partisan hands would be confided the entire control of every gas, electric light, and power corporation in this State.

"The Republicans had enough votes to pass every bill introduced as the result of the work of the Stevens Committee, except the bill to lower the price of gas, and it does not call for any great amount of wisdom to discover in which subject they were most interested—the price of gas or the creation of a political machine capable of more practical corruption than anything that has been attempted at Albany in recent years.

"I would not vote for cheap gas with one breath and for the upbuilding of a partisan machine with the next. I believed that Democratic Senators were justified in opposing the legislation because of the political ends it was intended to serve.

"Mr. Murphy had all along told me that he was in favor of the passage of the cheap gas bill which I introduced, and I suppose that he thought no further instructions on the subject were necessary. And none would have been if the Republicans had not attempted to play politics with the legislation in a way which I felt Democrats were not called upon to indorse."

Speaking of the telegram sent by Mayor McClellan to Tammany Senators urging them to give their support to the eighty-cent gas bill, Senator Foley said that als copy of the telegram was not delivered to him until after the vote on the gas bill had been taken. He said he knew that other Tammany Senators received the Mayor's message when it was too late.

POACHERS IN BRONX PARK.

Zoological Society After Miscreants Who Shoot Birds.

Officials of the New York Zoological Park said last night that, although ever since they had assumed the responsibility of protecting the wild birds and animals in the Bronx reservation, they had fought an almost constant war against poachers; certain miscreants seemed determined to kill every wild thing in the park that could be eaten.

The officials made special reference to the pot-hunting which has been going on for some time, conducted mainly by Italians. Not only Italians, however, are blamed. On Wednesday Special Policeman Van Benschoten caught a German named Herman Crumpuls trying to shoot robins in the Bronx Park. The German was arrested and later fined $1, which he paid and left the court remarking, the Bronx Park officials say, that he would be willing to come up again for $1.

The officials of the Bronx Park are indignant about this case, and are determined to put a stop to poaching. About a month ago the society decided to pay a cash reward of from $20 to $40 for the conviction of such miscreants.

PASTOR IN PATROL WAGON.

But the Rev. Dr. Raymond Was Complainant, Nothing Else.

When it was all explained yesterday the church folk of Flatbush recovered from the shock they experienced at beholding the pastor of a prominent local church riding to a police station in a patrol wagon. It seems that on Thursday afternoon the Rev. Dr. J. Raymond, pastor of the Vanderveer Park Methodist Episcopal Church, was visited by a smooth young man who tried to swindle him out of $5. The minister called in Detective Kane, who arrested the stranger.

As the Flatbush Police Station was about a mile distant Dr. Raymond accepted the detective's invitation to ride there in the patrol wagon and make a complaint. On the way the clergyman passed many of the members of his flock, who passed their hands over their eyes in a dazed way when they saw him go by.

Yesterday, in the Flatbush Court, the prisoner, who said he was George Rogers, no home, was sent to the penitentiary for six months for vagrancy.

"Some of my people seemed shocked when they saw me in that wagon yesterday," said Dr. Raymond, smilingly. "Guess I'd better get around and explain how it happened."

STRIKE MAY END TO-DAY.

Chicago Team Owners Tell Union Men the Fight Is Lost.

CHICAGO, May 12.—A severe blow was dealt to the cause of the striking teamsters to-night, and as a result the governing body of the organization, the Teamsters' Joint Council, to-morrow night will meet to decide whether the strike shall be called off.

The decision to call this meeting of the council followed a two-hour session between officers of the Teamsters' Union and of the Team Owners' Association. The members of the latter body have all through the present strike been favorable to the teamsters rather than to the Employers' Association. To-night, however, the team owners bluntly informed the teamsters that the strike was lost, and that the best thing they could do was to call off the strike at once. The meeting of the council was then set for to-morrow night.

The second blow came also from the Team Owners' Association, when the resignation of John C. Driscoll, its Secretary, was tendered and accepted. Secretary Driscoll has been an officer of the Team Owners' Association since its inception several years ago.

The Illinois Manufacturers' Association, which is made up of business men from all parts of the State, at a secret meeting to-night unanimously decided that they would uphold the cause of the Employers' Association which has been conducting the fight against the striking teamsters, and that they would do all in their power to make the Employers' Association a permanent institution.

The Employers' Association to-day operated 1,900 wagons. Two non-union drivers were assaulted and severely injured, but beyond these cases there was little interference with the delivery of goods.

DUNNE AFTER GRAFTERS.

Starts General Investigation of City Departments.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 12.—A general investigation into every department in the City Hall is expected in the near future. An upheaval is predicted. This developed to-day, when it was learned that the action of Commissioner of Public Works Patterson, in preferring charges of incompetency against Frank W. Solon, Assistant Superintendent of Streets and Alleys, was only the initial step to a more widespread inquiry.

Mayor Dunne has invited citizens to send any information they have, saying: "If there are any grafters in the City Hall they cannot remain. It is the duty of any man who has information of graft to appear before the Mayor and tell him what he knows."

KAISER ANGERS STRASBURG.

Invited to a Schiller Celebration, He Reviews Garrison.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, May 12.—The people of Strasburg are furious with the Kaiser, because at the time the Schiller celebration was in progress he reviewed the garrison, although he had been specially invited by the Stadtholder of the province.

By The Associated Press.

BERLIN, May 12.—The Frankfurter Zeitung to-day gives the following version of the remarks made recently by Emperor William at Strasburg to the higher officers after a review of troops:

"As we hear it, the Emperor the day before yesterday said to the officers after a review that certain aspects of the Russo-Japanese war emphasized the necessity for sober, moral living among the officers and men. He pointed out also the significance of the race groupings in East Asia which might become important for the German Army."

According to the Strassburg Buerger Zeitung, the German Emperor said on the occasion referred to:

"The Russian army which fought at Mukden had became enervated by immorality and drunkenness. Only in this way can its defeat at Mukden be explained. As Russia has shown weakness in the presence of the Yellow Danger circumstances might arise which would place upon Germany the task of opposing this danger. Officers and men must spend their time well so that they shall not fall into immorality and intemperance."

The Strassburger Post gives a version differing materially from the Buerger Zeitung's report, but containing a number of other interesting details.

"Young men in the army," said the Emperor, according to the Post, "must have more to do; they must work hard all day so as to be thoroughly fatigued by evening and want to go to bed early, instead of seeking enervating pleasures. The officers' corps is the soul of the army and must ever be kept in trim, otherwise the army suffers. The present war furnishes examples enough of that.

"The Japanese officers' corps is extremely efficient, and, like the Japanese common soldier, has stood the test fully. The Russian officers' corps, on the other hand, has completely failed, whereas the Russian soldiers have behaved well and fought bravely. My son told me Russian officers bought up all the champagne in Kiao-Chau.

"The soldier in the field must accustom himself to an abstemious life and dare not think of such things. In regard to field tactics, it must be said that the lessons of the Boer war have been confirmed. One must not offer one's self as a target to the enemy, and in making or repelling attack one must not wait for pioneers, but the soldiers must themselves take the spade in hand.

"The Russians have built splendid defensive works, such as could hardly have been better made in peace. The oldest defensive works, like pitfalls and others, which are almost forgotten among us, have again come into favor. Most important of all are barbed-wire defenses, which were liberally used by the Russians and caused the Japanese many losses.

"In regard to supreme commandership, this war again confirms the old doctrine that many ignore, that in such extended battlefields the Commander in Chief must above all things not go to the front. There he only has a view of the part of the field nearest Him, but completely loses oversight and direction of the whole.

"In the battle of Mukden Gen. Kuropatkin committed the error of going to the front. The Japanese Commander in Chief, Marshal Oyama, remained far to the rear, and conducted from there a vastly extended struggle. He received telegraphic reports, gave telegraphic orders, and sat there as calmly as a chess player, instantly making move after move. Kuropatkin completely failed in this for the lack of a suitable position."

These remarks were uttered in the usual military criticism that the Emperor makes to higher officers after parades and manoeuvres.

"JACKIES" CHEERED AT GARDEN TOURNEY

Men from Alabama Give Spirited Street Riot Drill.

ADMIRAL COGHLAN REVIEWS

13th Regt. Athletes Win Four Final Championships, Breaking One Record—Gen. Grant To-night's Guest.

It was naval night at the Military Tournament in Madison Square Garden last night. Rear Admiral Joseph G. Coghlan, Commandant of the Brooklyn Navy Yard, was the reviewing officer. He was attended by a naval escort, all in full dress uniform, making a brilliant display as they entered the Garden.

A special feature was the presence of about one hundred jackies from the United States gunboat Alabama, which recently arrived here from Cuba. Attired in their natty white seaman's dress, they made a striking display, as they took part in the regular review. Later in the evening they gave a spirited and splendidly conducted drill, illustrating the effective manner in which Uncle Sam's naval boys could quell a street riot. Standing back-to-back in two long lines, they loaded and fired with rapidity, showing careful training, and leaving a vivid impression upon the spectators that the men behind the guns in the navy could use the small firearms quite as well as the larger guns. The jackies only had to appear on the arena floor for tremendous applause to burst forth from all parts of the Garden. They were clearly the heroes of the evening.

Rear Admiral Coghlan was accompanied by Mrs. Coghlan. In the reviewing party were Capt. Carl Roher, Capt. Turner, Lieut. Commander Kellogg, Lieut. Smith, Paymaster Cheatham, Naval Constructor Williams, and Col. Dyer. Col. James Jarvis of the Eighth Regiment commanded the review, and it went off with the utmost smoothness in every particular.

Company G of the Fifteenth United States Cavalry earned the plaudits of the crowd by splendid exhibitions of rough riding and a music ride which has never been excelled in the Garden. The troopers understand their horses thoroughly, and it is seldom that so large a number of perfectly trained animals is seen in the ring. Over thirty men take part in these exercises, and they have been among the most popular events of the tournament every evening. The infantry battle drills and the exhibitions by the Third Battery were also enjoyed and were cleverly executed. The Canadian Highlanders, of course, came in for their share of applause.

The athletic events were notable for close finishes. The obstacle race was won by H. A. Riddick, who broke the old record of 1:46, which has stood since 1901, by nearly nine seconds. The Thirteenth Regiment athletes took the major share of the trophies.

The tournament will close to-day with two performances. Gen. Fred D. Grant will be the reviewing officer. The summaries:

TAKE TAINTED MONEY? YES; BUT SUB ROSA

Admissions Made by Various Kinds of Ethical Teachers.

TESTS BY JOHN G. BROOKS

Committee Headed by Bishop Brent to Investigate the Subject Never Made a Report.

BOSTON, May 12.—The Social Science Association's session to-night was given over to a consideration of the subject of "tainted money." President John Graham Brooks of the association opened the discussion with a paper entitled "The Theory of Tainted Money." He said, in part:

"Four years ago a committee was appointed by Bishop Potter to report upon a situation which involved whatever is contained in the term 'tained money.' The committee consisted of Bishop Brent, Prof. Ashley, Prof. Scudder, and myself. For reasons that need not here be given, the report was not completed.

"I prepared a list of questions which I put to heads of institutions, overseers, directors, clergymen, and various kinds of ethical teachers. The first question was this: 'Would you accept money from any source for the enlargement of your educational work?' Those rather noted for practical wisdom in their communities almost invariably answered this with an amused but very confident affirmative.

"This test was then submitted: 'Would you accept the current receipts from a disorderly house, and have it publicly known that you took the money?' The instant reply was: 'Of course not.' I asked: 'Why not?' 'Because,' was the answer, 'it would create too much scandal.' To the further inquiry: 'Would you take it if it were never known?' one educator said: 'I don't feel sure, but I am inclined to think so.'

"The second question: 'If the Louisana Lottery were still running would you publicly accept a gift from its Directors to endow a chair for ethical instruction?'

"He said: 'That kind of thing used to be done, but I question if it would be wise to do it now. No, I don't think I should take that money under those conditions.'

"I next asked a writer and professor in Columbia University if he would take all moneys. He said: 'As long as I was sane.' To the first test as applied above, he replied at once: 'No, I would not.' 'But, why?' 'It would make too much of a row.'" In conclusion Prof. Brooks said:

"If the bringer of gifts is so incontestably and conspicuously convicted that his methods and character are an affront to the community the way for rejection is clear. This was the one implication true of every case and of every illustration I could collect."

Champions Gain a Lucky Victory in Last Game with St. Louis.

With only five hits to their credit, the New Yorks won the last game of the series with the St. Louis team yesterday by a score of 6 to 5. Egan's wild pitching in the first two innings helped more than anything else to defeat his team, although the three fielding errors charged against the visitors were of a damaging character. Leaving Egan's poor work and the errors out of the question, victory would have gone to the St. Louisians by a score of 3 to 0. Their batting, however, was not much freer than that of the local men, but the hits counted for runs.

Notwithstanding the mistakes of each team, there were numerous instances of brilliant fielding. Wiltse, in particular, distinguished himself by some remarkable stops and cutting off almost safe, base-hits. In the sixth inning, after jumping high in the air and catching Burke's fast bounding ball, he threw it accurately to Dahlen, putting out Dunleavy, and Dahlen returned the ball to first, completing one of the most brilliant double plays seen on any of the local grounds this season. Dunleavy also made a rather sensational play in the eighth inning, when a ball was hit to right field with tremendous force, but in the batter's effort to stretch it to a double Dunleavy made a beautiful throw to Arndt and caught the runner handily.

The New Yorks had the game well in hand for six innings, the score then being 6 to 2. They had made three runs in the first inning, on three bases on called balls, McGann's hit by pitcher, and Bresnahan's two-base hit to centre field. They added two more unearned runs in the second inning, on a base on balls, Donlin's safe infield hit, Clarke's fumble and McGann's long fly to right field. After this Egan settled down and pitched excellent ball, but three more hits being charged against him in the sixth inning, after two were out, Dahlen tallied on a safe hit to third base, a steal, and Arndt's bad fumble of Devlin's ground ball.

CHICAGO, 5; BOSTON, 4.

BOSTON, May 12.—Chicago won a loosely played though exciting game from Boston in eleven innings to-day by 5 to 4. Both pitchers were effective until the final inning. In the first half of the eleventh Chicago scored four runs on two bases on balls, one hit, two errors, and an outfield fly. Boston, in its half, by fine batting, scored three runs, but could not get in the tying run. The visitors' base running was a feature. The score:

AMERICAN LEAGUE.

New Yorks Outplay Chicago and Score Seven Runs to Three.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 12.—The crippled Greater New Yorks whipped the Chicago team by 7 to 3 to-day. It was probably the longest nine-inning affair of the year. White was chosen to pitch against Orth, but it became evident in the first inning, when New York batted in two runs, that White was not right. He got away with the second inning in good shape, but in the third gave the first man up a base on balls, and after Williams had sacrificed, Conroy cut loose another hit, driving Fultz around to third. Here was where Manager Jones switched to Walsh, with one out and two on bases. Walsh immediately filled the circuit, hitting Yeager with the first ball pitched. Chase dropped a sharp bounder to Walsh, who deflected it with his mitt just enough to keep it out of everybody's reach, and two runs scored.

In the fifth inning the visitors scored three runs with only one hit and without a fielding error. Two bases on balls, two passed balls, and three stolen bases were combined with that one hit to make the three runs. After that the New Yorks rested on their laurels.

CLEVELAND, 5; WASHINGTON, 4.

CLEVELAND, May 12.—Cleveland won to-day's game from Washington and thus regained first place in a most peculiar manner. With one out in the ninth inning, Bay doubled, and Flick's out advanced him to third. Then, after a conference of Washington players, Jacobsen purposely gave Lajoie and Bradley bases on balls. He then found himself unable to pitch strikes, and also sent Turner to base on balls, forcing Bay over the plate. Score:

Jersey City Beaten Again by the Team from Providence.

Providence won another game from Jersey City yesterday, the score being 4 to 3. The visitors tallied once in the fourth inning, the result of a hit and errors by Halligan and Woods. Jersey City evened the score in the sixth. Up to that time the local men had not been able to get a man beyond first base. McAuley lined out a double, and went to third on Mack's sacrifice, scoring on Bean's single to right field. Providence again assumed the lead in the seventh, adding another run on a three-bagger by Coan and Thomas's single.

In Jersey City's last try at the bat Merritt got to first on called balls. Halligan hit to the left field fence for two bases. Vandergrift following with a single, allowing Merritt to score, and putting Halligan on third. Halligan crossed the plate on Woods's drive to short, which resulted in a retired double play. Score:

MRS. BARGER-WALLACH WINS.

By Clever Play She Defeats Miss Pell for Class A Tennis Title.

By excellent varying of her racquet work between base line and net Mrs. Barger-Wallach yesterday won the lawn tennis championship in the women's Class A singles at the St. Nicholas Rink. In winning Mrs. Barger-Wallach displayed the same resourceful tactical play which has in past seasons won honors at Newport for her against Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Miss Anna Sands, and the other women experts.

In the newly instituted Women's Lawn Tennis League Mrs. Barger-Wallach represents the Tuxedo Club, and her opponent, Miss Gertrude Pell, the Meadow Club of Southampton, L. I. Miss Pell made a plucky effort to win, and in the final set had the vantage, game, and point on her side, putting her within one stroke of the championship. Only remarkable strength saved Mrs. Barger-Wallach from defeat.

The summary:

Women's Class A Singles.—Final Round—Mrs. Barger-Wallach defeated Miss Gertrude Pell, 7—5, 5—7, 7—5.

A POPULAR DELUSION.

The thanks of the American Stock Growers' Association have been by resolution extended to President ROOSEVELT for "his fight for equal rights to all at the hands of the railroads."

When did that fight begin? Where was the battlefield? Is it still in progress? We can very well understand that out of all the tumult and the shouting about putting a stop to railroad abuses the stock growers, and multitudes of other persons, may have got the idea that the President has really been fighting for equal rights to all at the hands of the railroads. But those whose interest and duty it is to watch the procedures of the Executive with close attention have no information as to any war of that kind waged by the President against the railroads. The President's fight is to obtain, for a railroad commission appointed by himself, the right to fix railroad freight rates. We have seen no evidence that he has fought for "equal rights," that is, that he has effectively and seriously attacked secret rebates and discriminating rates, which are almost the whole body and soul of the railroad denial of equal rights to shippers.

Quite the most remarkable of all the aspects of the relation of the Federal Government to the railroads is the continuing neglect of the Inter-State Commerce Commission to use the very great powers it has to put a stop to railroad abuses, and its ceaseless importuning of Congress and the public for new powers which, in the judgment of many wise men, it does not need and ought not to have. Unmistakably the present law puts into the hands of the Inter-State Commerce Commission the power to correct and punish discriminations, whether by secret rebates or otherwise. In cases where this power has been used very substantial relief has been given to the complainants and to the public. In that department of the Commission's activities, too, its decisions have been much more frequently sustained by the courts than in cases where it has dealt with unreasonable rates or has attempted to go beyond its powers and fix rates, as it frequently did up to the Supreme Court decision in 1896, in which it was told that it had no rate-making power.

Yet for years members of the Commission have been complaining that they had no power. Three years ago Commissioner PROUTY in an address to the American Economic Association at Philadelphia said: "Regulation means control, and there is and can be no control by the Government over inter-State transportation until some method is adopted to supervise and correct railway rates." In April of that year he told the Illinois Manufacturers' Association at Chicago that the Commission had no authority to correct railroad rate abuses. In its report for the year 1899 the Commission said that the railroad companies could charge for their services whatever they pleased, and as much as they pleased, "without any real power in this Commission, or any other tribunal or court, to limit the amount of such charge for the future." This in the face of the fact that the Commission's power to declare a rate unreasonable and to order it modified is undoubted, and has been sustained by the courts.

The Commission has resented criticisms passed upon it for its failure to provide remedies for notorious abuses of secret rebates and discriminations. It has felt that the detective work necessary in ferreting out secret rebates was beneath its dignity, so that instead of this arm of the Executive power being employed in a "fight for equal rights to all at the hands of the railroads" it has appeared to spend its time in depreciating the value of the powers it possesses and in clamoring for new powers, which Congress at the time of the passage of the act expressly declined to confer upon it. In the session of the Senate Committee on May 8 Mr. BACON, the instigator of a great part of the agitation for a rate-fixing law, being on the stand, Senator CULLOM expressed himself as follows:

Mr. BACON, a thing that has puzzled me is this: When the original act was passed the great complaint was rebates and unjust discriminations. Since we have entered upon this investigation here this Spring men have come before us and said, "Rebates are a thing of the past;" "Discriminations are a thing of the past." Those were the only things that seemed to require very much legislation, in the first place. Now they are gone, and the query is, to my mind, what the occasion is now for more legislation. That is why I am trying to find out from you just what you are driving at. * * * To-day, so far as we can learn, there is not a very great amount of complaint against the rates being unreasonable.

The "fight" now being waged is not against the real, the substantial evil of discriminations, rebates, and other forms of denying equal rights to shippers—it is altogether in behalf of conferring new and dangerous powers upon a commission that has for years exhibited itself to the country as unwilling or incompetent to use the large powers it already possesses.

FRANCE AND JAPAN.

There is no trace in the Japanese official complaint against France of the heat with which the Japanese press has treated the questions arising out of the hospitality shown to the Russian squadron on the coast of Madagascar, and again on the coast of French Indo-China. It is a simple enumeration of the acts of which Japan considers that she has reason to complain, leading up to the proposition that "it was for the ends of warfare," or, as we should express it, for belligerent purposes, "that Vice Admiral ROJESTVENSKY utilized, on successive occasions, French waters for anchoring and revictualing and for awaiting the arrival of reinforcements." This is a sufficiently explicit declaration that the Russian ships have made use of neutral waters as a base of operations against their enemy. "Strong facts do not need strong language."

There is, to be sure, some question about the facts. Admiral ROJESTVENSKY was perfectly within his rights, according to the commonly accepted interpretation of international law, if he stayed just outside the three-mile limit. He was then on the high seas, and entitled to stay there so long as it suited him. But then the French private interpretation of international law, as it may fairly be called, does not recognize the three-mile limit any more than it recognizes the twenty-four-hour limit. That fact was brought out in the story of the fight between the Alabama and the Kearsarge, the official version of which we reprinted not long ago. The French authorities insisted that the ships should not fight within six or seven miles of the shore, although Mr. DAYTON, our Minister to Paris, pointed out that there was no limit but that of three miles laid down by any authority on international law.

The French contention, as "semi-officially" put forward, is that France has observed faithfully the obligations of neutrality as she understands them. One of those obligations which she does recognize is that a belligerent fleet shall not be permitted to augment its fighting capacity in a neutral port. This, it is insisted, France has not permitted to be done. France has not even allowed the coaling of the Russian ships at French ports, with one trifling exception. The text of the French explanation on this point is: "It is the English and the Germans who have supplied the coal, and Tokio has never protested against the action of England and of Germany." There is here an obvious disingenuousness which we may be sure would not be employed if the explanation were official instead of only semi-official. The business of supplying coal to belligerent ships at sea, or in any port in which the local authorities will permit them to take it, is one in which private traders of any nation are free to engage, subject to the risk that their coal will be confiscated as contraband if intercepted by the ships of the other belligerent. If it happens that French traders have not engaged in this traffic at this risk, and that English and German traders have, that makes no difference at all from the point of view of international law. The disingenuousness is in attributing to "England" and "Germany" the acts of individual Englishmen and Germans.

That France, a country which has but few naval stations around the world of her own, and Russia, a country which has none, should hold a different view of neutral obligations from Great Britain, "which has dotted over the whole surface of the globe with her possessions and military posts," is not remarkable. It remains true that by all theories of the duties of neutrals one of them is to abstain from permitting the use of neutral territory as a naval or military base for belligerent operations. Whether France has or has not done so is the question which Japan, by her formal protest, has "reserved," to be tried at a more convenient season.

THE GERMAN RAILWAY EXPERIMENT.

When the German Ambassador said to the Railway Congress at Washington, "We do not recommend that you follow our example in the national ownership of railways," he cannot have meant that the German experiment had failed. It is too soon to admit that, and it would not be the duty of a German Ambassador to make the admission before the representatives of so many countries which are engaged in much the same experiment. His remark was but a preface to the offer to lay before the Congress all the information it might desire on the matter.

Yet it would have been quite within the truth had Baron VON STERNBURG said that, if the experiment was not a failure, it certainly was not an assured success. The essential purpose of Government ownership of roads in Germany was to establish rates that should be equitable as between different interests and localities, as nearly uniform as possible, and at the same time yielding a sufficient revenue. According to Prof. H. R. MEYER of the University of Chicago, who has made a prolonged practical study of the working of Government ownership in Germany, none of these purposes has been very nearly approached. The difficulty has been in finding an adjustment of rates for short distances and long distances, small customers and large customers, points free from water competition and those exposed to it. No such adjustment has been discovered, and none seems likely. The general result has been a striking "long-continued impediment to trade and industry," and substantial "discrimination to a high degree in favor of districts with waterways as against those that do not possess this means of relief." And finally: "The Government has found it necessary to make what are known as exception tariffs to meet the needs of trade and industry, and in the eleven years ending with 1896 fully one-half of the traffic on Prussian railways was carried at exception rates, and since 1897 the proportion has risen to 60 per cent."

It is hardly necessary to point out that the difficulties existing in this country, with its vaster territory, with the far greater differences of situation and competition, with its rail and water communications running in a tangled web over such great areas, and with its constantly developing variety of industries, would be incalculably greater than the difficulties with which Germany has been struggling so unsatisfactorily for a score of years.

TRANSPORTING EXPLOSIVES.

The Superintendent of Passenger Transportation in the organization of the Pennsylvania Railroad, speaking of the calamity at South Harrisburg on Thursday, said: "It was an accident which could not have been avoided. Every precaution known in train operation was in effect, and, so far as I can see, there was not a single violation."

This is a view of the matter which is perhaps warranted from the standpoint of an official who is simply the executive of a policy established by the supreme management of a corporation. It is not, however, the view which the public is likely to take. Another officer of the road, prominently connected with its freight department, is credited with saying:

Dynamite is simply classed as slow freight and is treated just like so much coal, except that a sign is generally put on the car reading "High Explosive." As a common carrier a railroad has to accept it, but there isn't a railroad man who doesn't dread carrying it and who doesn't believe that a railroad should haul it on a special train of one car and an engine with a sign as big as the car telling what's on it, and ought to charge a special rate to cover the expense of this.

This is interesting. From it we learn that dynamite and other compounds of extremely unstable composition are simply classed as slow freight, although notification of what a car thus loaded contains is "generally" tacked on the outside of it. Evidently there is no rule to this effect, or it would be observed invariably. That a railroad as a common carrier is obliged to receive high explosives as freight to be handled with and like other freight, is a proposition that does not appeal to the average intelligence as having any basis in law or sense. There are a great many things which cannot be shipped as ordinary freight. Perhaps some are thus received which should not be, and if the railroads should refuse them, such refusal would undoubtedly be sustained by the courts if appeal were taken to them. This would seem to be peculiarly true of a material which no railroad man believes should be hauled save in a one-car train and ample notice in the shape of a proclamation of the car's contents. Even then we imagine the railroad men would be afraid of assignments to such trains.

The fact of the matter is that the railroad companies want all of this kind of freight they can get. In February, 1904, Senator ELKINS, Chairman of the Inter-State Commerce Committee, introduced a bill placing the regulation of the transportation of high explosives in the hands of that Commission. It was the result of his personal experience in passing a night in a sleeper alongside a car loaded with dynamite, and in which he did not enjoy very restful sleep. This bill was killed by the opposition offered by the railroads. The South Harrisburg explosion will probably focus public attention upon this matter with the result of compelling enactments which will better safeguard the traveling public than is done by the present classification of high explosives as slow freight.

THE KAISER ON THE WAR.

We are all aware that the Kaiser is not the only Chief Magistrate who is much given to the theory and practice of homiletics. Which of them "doth it with the better grace" may be a matter of dispute; but it would be difficult indeed to say which "doth it the more natural."

The Kaiser's latest preachments look like experiments on dangerous ground. He is not just now sending orders of merit to Russian Generals, or expressing his desire that the Russian regiment of which he is honorary Colonel shall "do him proud." On the contrary, his most recent comments on the war are calculated to strain his relations with his great and good friend the Czar of Russia. Only in March he pointed out to his naval recruits at Wilhelmshaven that they must not rashly conclude from the Japanese victories that "Russia is defeated before our LORD GOD," and proceeded to intimate his belief that the orthodox Russian brand of Christianity was not the best variety. And just now, in comes the report of his remarks at the review in Strasburg, plumply declaring that the forces of his great and good friend in Manchuria were "enervated by immorality and alcoholism" or they would not have been defeated at all.

The Czar cannot be expected to enjoy this kind of military criticism. But, if it were always necessary to take the Kaiser seriously, a more general alarm would be excited by his assertion that "now that Russia has shown itself too weak to resist the Yellow Peril, the task of checking this peril may fall on Germany." The only Yellow Peril which one can imagine as besetting Germany is the chance that Japan may undertake to extrude her from her possessions in China which she took as the price of two murdered missionaries, the blood of the martyrs thus becoming the seed of railway and mining privileges. And, although the German General Staff has in its pigeonholes schemes for many campaigns, including, as is reported, one for the invasion and conquest of the United States, it is doubtful whether it has yet laid out a plan for the conquest of Japan. The part of the imperial address which will excite the most painful emotion is that which sets forth that the time of the privates of the German Army "must be taxed to the utmost in order that they may have no time to think of such things" as "alcoholism and debauchery." The German private does not even now find himself with abundant leisure on his hands, and the project of working him still harder in order to keep him out of such riotous living as his pay might afford will be received by him with great though mute disgust.

The answer of a teamster in Chicago to the question why he did not continue at work—"Because I don't want to be killed"—should startle the community into a very much more active co-operation with the authorities in establishing and maintaining order. Popular apathy encourages lawlessness and permits the Magistrates before whom are brought those taken in riot and violence to carry leniency far beyond the limit of reasonable judicial discretion. What loss of popularity Mayor DUNNE may suffer from his refusal to withdraw the police from wagons of the firms against which the teamsters are on strike, to the end that ruffians, for whom the unions would promptly disclaim all responsibility, may stone, shoot, or otherwise destroy the drivers who take such wagons out, should be made good by a cordial expression of public confidence and approval. To comply with the demand of the joint committee of the unions would be to surrender Chicago to armed mobs which would begin by stopping all traffic and probably end by general pillage.

That President HARPER of Chicago University appears to be getting well is extremely gratifying. While it is true that too much confidence might be felt in his opinion as to the means by which his recovery has been effected, the fact remains that if confidence may be felt in the diagnosis of his disease the Lieber treatment for cancer promises to be of great service to humanity—provided, of course, enough radium can be produced to meet the requirements of those who, in one form or another, are suffering from cancer. No doubt if the demand were great enough many hitherto neglected sources of radium supply, notably the slimes of certain springs which from time immemorial have been noted for their curative powers, would be utilized, and less expensive methods of recovering it would be found. It is consumed so slowly, notwithstanding the almost miraculous intensity of its radiations, that every particle recovered and put in useful shape will last with unimpaired usefulness through periods so long that they must be expressed in centuries rather than in years.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

English Words and Latin.

If The Hartford Courant is, or claims to be, in any degree representative of New England culture, education, and taste, it ought to blush for some remarks it has just made in favor of changing, forthwith and forever, the name of "Arbor Day" to something else. "The present designation," it says, "is a hybrid affair, and clumsy at that; as an esteemed contemporary has pointed out, the great majority of the people are not Latinists, and when they speak of an 'arbor' they mean a structure with vines on it. 'Tree Day' is plain, honest English—and American, too." Which is nonsense from beginning to end. "Arbor Day" is no great shakes as a product of the nominative faculty, but it does well enough, especially as the name of a thing which, though excellent in intention and apparently possessing many potentialities for good, has somehow or other failed to catch the popular fancy and in most parts of the country is kept barely alive by the laborious efforts of a few lightweight sentimentalists, to whom, so far as we know, scientific forestry owes little or none of its slow progress. Of course, "Arbor Day" is a "hybrid," but so, also, is "Independence Day" and "Decoration Day," and, to our ears, at least, it is no more "clumsy" than they are. As a matter of fact, the great majority of the people are Latinists, in that they use during every waking hour and with a perfect comprehension of their significance as many number of words that are just as much Latin as is the "arbor" in "Arbor Day," and while they do, very properly, mean a structure with vines on it when they say "arbor," when they say "Arbor Day" they put into, and the others get out of, the word quite another and equally accurate idea, and they do it without any unconsciousness at all of mental labor. "Tree Day" would have clanged as well, perhaps, if it had been taken at the time, but it would not have been appreciably better in any respect, and in several it would have been inferior. For instance, there is a certain dignity and formality to "arbor" that go well with ceremonial exercises, and then its use provides, for those who know—which The Courant apparently does not—that the "arbor" in "Arbor Day" is a wholly different word from the "arbor" that means a vine-clad shelter, an excuse to give children a valuable and not too repulsive lesson in historical etymology. Nothing is more wearisome for the judicious than the senseless iteration of a preference for "English" words, so called, over "Latin" words, so called, and each as such. This silly preference, and the resentful horror which so many people feel when somebody is kind enough to force a new word into their scanty vocabulary, really should get more attention from the alienists than they do, for both are clear proof of mental weakness.

Clinging to a Delusion.

Nothing could better illustrate the danger of trusting to careless observation, and especially to the memory of such observation, than the number of letters we are getting from people who, while not denying outright our recent statement that trees never raise from one position to a higher one objects placed in their branches or attached to their trunks, still insist that they have themselves seen trees do just this thing. Of course none of these correspondents is trying to deceive us, of course each of them is putting in words as accurately as he can the testimony of his own eyes, and, of course, in every one of the cases mentioned there is some basis of fact for the assertions made. And yet it remains true that woody cells, once formed, never move in the processes of growth, properly so called, and that it is only the formation of new cells that ever moves anything else in any direction. There are some apparent exceptions to the rule in the sprouting of seeds and the pushing upward of their first leaves, but the exceptions are only apparent, and there is none at all to the rule that tree trunks are not thrust up out of the ground ready made, or to the other rule that the height of a bough's attachment to the tree trunk remains always the same as long as the bough lasts. As has been suggested, if that cannon ball in the branches of a tree in Havana is now higher than it used to be, the elevation is due to the increased diameter of the branches, and not to an extension that takes place in the formed substance of those branches. As for the raising of a gate by the maple tree on which it was hung, that seems to be a clear case of mistaken observation. The correspondent who vouched for that gate thought he presented a theory of the phenomenon harmonious with our position when he said that the elevation of the gate was due to the increasing diameter of the base of the tree, but he ignored the fact that the growth of the trunk would not have pushed out the spikes fastening the lower hinges; it would simply have covered them up, and circumstances are hardly imaginable in which even the outer end of the gate would have been raised. It is extremely easy to find people who think they remember branches now high in air under which, when children, they could hardly walk. They, too, are simply mistaken. The branches they remember perished and disappeared long ago, and the branches they see now had probably not then come into being, even as terminal twigs. The evidence of eye-witnesses is good enough for courts, where many a mediaeval idea survives, but the scientist always distrusts it, and so avoids numerous blunders, absurd or dangerous.

Betrayed Their Uneasiness.

It would have been a little more tactful, perhaps, if the pawnbrokers at their annual dinner had not made their own merits the topic of most of their speeches, and, with more of the shrewdness with which they are generally credited—or discredited—they would have realized that even if self-defense is not, as the French think, always self-accusation, it comes to much the same thing if it is made when nobody is attacking. In a way, however, and to a degree, the pawnbroking fraternity is constantly under attack, and the popular estimation of it is not the kinder because it usually takes a humorous twist. Of course, the pawnbrokers, like other classes of the same size, include good men and bad, and some who are half way between. Equally of course, the business in itself is defensible on a dozen excellent grounds and commendable on at least as many more, but the fact remains, and always will, that the pawnbroker, rather more than most business men makes his profit out of the urgent needs and painful emergencies of his fellows. Honest as he may be, and filling as he does a place in the social structure at once legitimate and useful, he necessarily invites the dislike of those who, if he were missing, would find their needs and emergencies much more desperate than they are at present. Humanity is so built that it can hire a house or a horse or a boat or a thousand other things without an instinctive feeling that the rent is extortion and the renter an extortioner, but the hiring of money is somehow different and humanity will never get over its deeply-planted belief or suspicion or impression that he who takes interest on a loan is guilty of a mysterious sin, a peculiar meanness. The ancient books revered in many lands say so emphatically, and though we have argued their prohibitions in this matter all away, nowadays, it is only our heads that have been convinced. With the money-lender in general and the pawnbroker in particular our subliminal selves are still unreconciled. The fact is absurd, but so are many facts, and they are not on that account to be denied or ignored.

The Absent Interpreter.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reference to the discussion resultant of the passage of the Yale bill, granting pensions to civil service employes, I wish to narrate an incident that is characteristic of the class clamoring for that legislation. My father was a witness recently in a case tried in the Supreme Court. Unable to speak English, he asked for the interpreter. It then developed that the German interpreter has not been in court since June, 1904. Upon further inquiry I elicited from a court officer the information that said interpreter came to the city only to draw his salary, and the rest of the time he was managing a medical institution in Vermont. I wonder whether such a public servant, after receiving $2,500 per year for years, could be a candidate for a life pension upon retirement?

A Word Wanted.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

THE TIMES has long been regarded by all intelligent readers of current literature as a standard in the correct use of English. To prevent a confusion of ideas there seems to be a need for a new word. Can THE TIMES suggest one? The genuine Socialist looks upon the municipal ownership of city utilities with horror. He calls it City or State capitalism. He declares that it is a perpetuation of the "wage system," and the object of Socialism is to destroy the "wage system." On the other hand, in the public press and in conversation the municipal ownership of city utilities is constantly called Socialism. It seems certain that such a system cannot be correctly so designated. Will THE TIMES please give us the correct word?

BEWARE THE FAKE INSPECTOR

An Unpleasant Experience of a Gas Consumer.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Now that there has been so much notoriety about the gas question and the community is becoming fully informed as to the amount of extortion it had to, and thanks to our honest Legislature, must still submit to for an indefinite time, I wish to sound a note of warning to prevent other people from becoming victims as I did to a petty swindle.

Some time ago a man appeared at my residence and requested permission to inspect the meter, stating positively that if it was found to run fast the company would, upon his certificate, allow for the overcharge from the time the meter was in use. To fortify his statement he showed a printed slip of huge rebates obtained for large consumers, including churches and newspapers.

Though I had serious misgivings about the soft-hearted gas corporation paying a claim based on the alleged test of an outsider, the inspection at $3.50 was permitted and a man looking somewhat like a laborer went through the process of examining the meter and scrawled in lead pencil on a very doubtful-looking form that it "ran 8 per cent. fast," and signed this, not in the name of the inspection company, but his individual name, and then demanded to be paid the $3.50, which was declined. This company then sent a bill and on their assurance that the gas company would refund, I paid them, and submitted to the latter the form that was given me to send in, but was not at all surprised to receive a letter stating that they (the gas company) would have the meter examined by the State Inspector, whose position is official, and did not recognise the inspection company.

BANKS AND SPECULATION.

Financial Parasites and the Evils That Are Due to Them.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As neither a "banker nor a speculator," may I trespass upon your columns to speak of what I believe to be an evil of the "first magnitude" in the conduct of our banks and insurance and so-called trust companies, and to confirm the remarks made by Mr. W. B. Ridgely, Controller of the United States Currency, in his excellent speech before the National Bank Cashiers' Association in Boston, given in your issue of to-day?

A single paragraph in the above speech states the cause and the remedy for most of the financial delinquencies, viz., "neglect of duty," for which men are paid but fail to perform. The Directors in many of our financial institutions are paid to attend meetings, and cannot be brought together in any other way. What can be expected of men who will take money that they know does not legitimately belong to them, and which it ought to be made a penal offense to either pay or accept? Many of these men are mere "parasites," and are of no more use to the institutions they represent, and know no more of what is being done "on the inside" than a resurrected mummy. Put a stop to this, and there will be REFORM.

Immoral Slot Machines.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Can you have an automatic chocolate-vending machine arrested for theft, or, say, disorderly conduct, if it fails to deliver the goods for value received? Occasionally I put a penny in the slot of one of the machines in the Subway. Sometimes the machine works, sometimes it doesn't. Yesterday the first machine at Brooklyn Bridge entrance and likewise the one opposite the downtown stairs at Fourteenth Street transgressed the moral law.

Rare Flashes of Lightning.

From The London Globe.

Some rare flashes of lightning, especially very brilliant linear flashes, seem to persist for a time and fade gradually. On the background of the sky, in the place of the flash, one then sees a yellowish green or reddish image of the flash waning rapidly. Details can be distinguished in it which were invisible in the principal flash. According to M. Touchet, this image is not merely in the retina, for he has experienced the retinal image, as well as the other. The retinal image moves with the eye, the other does not. This afterglow has been compared to the train of a meteor or a fuse, to an incandescent electric filament and to a phosphorescence. The successive discharges of electricity in a lightning flash are so near the limit of persistence of vision (about a tenth of an inch) that flashes appear to tremble, but the same fact does not, according to Touchet, explain the luminous furrow above described, which he refers to incandescence of the elements of the air carried to a high temperature by the electric discharge. To prove this, he took a photograph of lightning during a thunderstorm on April 12. It has the aspect of a "ribbon flash"—that is to say, a bright wavering edge—to a dim band; which, he thinks, represents the after-glow caused by incandescent gas.

Photographing Swiss Glaciers.

From The London Telegraph.

Photography has recently been employed in Switzerland to obtain exact pictures of the glaciers as they now are. In future times the terminal moraines can be compared with those of the present day. Whatever may be the cause, the fact seems to be that glaciers all over the world are shrinking; they were once certainly far larger in Switzerland than they are now. The ice-caps round the poles are also growing less. As to the North Pole, this was pretty well known some time ago, and now the antarctic explorers report that the icefields round the Southern pole are also far less than they were when Ross made his antarctic voyage sixty years ago. When the reasons for this decrease of glaciation are known, a clue may be found for the occurrence of the glacial epoch, eighty or a hundred thousand years ago.

Antitoxin for Laziness.

From the Munich Medinische Wochenschrift.

Dr. Wolfgang Welchardt of Berlin has discovered an antitoxin for physical exhaustion and consequent laziness. The muscles after physical exhaustion contain a poison, which he extracts in the form of brown scales, and keeps in sealed tubes, preferably in liquid air. This toxin, when injected into guineapigs, produces symptoms of exhaustion. It cannot be got from the muscles of unexhausted animals. With it he obtains an antitoxin from horses after the manner of diphtheric antitoxin. This antitoxin, dried in a vacuum, also takes the form of brown scales, which can be kept. It preserves its antitoxic power for months. Injected under the skin by a hypodermic syringe, or taken into the stomach, it cures exhaustion or tiredness, enables a person to exert more strength than usual, and counteracts poisonous doses of the toxin. These results, of course, will require to be confirmed by careful experiments. Needless to say, if there be no illusion or mistake on the matter, if by taking a pill or pricking the skin with a needle point we can banish fatigue, sleepiemness, or laziness, it should be a great boon all round in work or play, in peace or in war.

An Idle Phrase.

OLD POTS AND PANS OF CHINA.

Ancient Bronzes and Pottery Gems in the Museum of Natural History.

The Chinese department of the Museum of Natural History, in charge of Dr. Laufer, has been temporarily enriched by two collections, both of them loans, by Mr. Thomas B. Clarke and Mr. Okazaki Sessel, respectively. They occupy a number of cases near the modern Chinese objects in the west wing. Apart from their beauty of form and color and general artistic value, they are often interesting from the fact that they show many of the original forms which the Chinese of to-day are still using, sometimes in objects for very much the same purpose.

The pottery lent by Mr. Clarke comes directly from China, and in many instances offers proof of long burial underground by the presence of a fine lustrous film due to disintegration of the glaze. Certain jars of simple and robust contour are reckoned of the Han dynasty, several centuries before Christ. Others have gained a bronzelike surface so that at first glance the material of which they are made is misunderstood, and in some of these cases the illusion is increased from the fact that bronzes of the same shape with the same very low and infrequent decorative bands, but of much greater age, are present in collections. The inference drawn is that these pottery jars, vases, and pots were made for burial with the dead, to contain food and rice-spirit.

A beautiful specimen is clearly a copy of a bronze tripod with broad belly and quaint curving handles, the neck and cover decorated in very low relief with leaf patterns and a band with animals running, or opposed in couples as in battle. Very curious are a pottery sheepfold with rows of little couchant sheep near a well inside the round fold; a pottery grinding mill for the hand, objects like candlesticks, with a wide saucerlike bottom, and the cover to the cup representing a rocky island, holes being left in the cover to allow the smoke of incense to rise. There are many pottery models of granaries. Some of these old pieces have obtained by age a delicate silvery hue, difficult to describe.

Mr. Okazaki Sessi is a famous bronze-caster of Tokio, who was lately a professor in the College of Fine Arts, and brought this collection of ancient Chinese bronzes to America to show at the St. Louis Fair. His specialty is the production of patinas on bronze. The objects here shown were bought in part from Daimio families, who cherished them as heirlooms, in part from China. Some are assigned to the Chin dynasty, from which the Romans took the name of China in the second century before Christ, others from the Han, (206 B. C. to 221 A. D.,) and the Tang, (618-709 A. D.) The variety of patinas on these wine and incense jars is only equaled by their beauty; apple greens and turquoise blues, rusty reds and pale yellows, purples and lapis-lazulis are found in spots on dark green and brown objects.

Mr. Okazaki has many curious ideas about ancient bronzes. Their colors, he says, have been classified in five types as Denseiko, or produced by handling for many centuries as heirlooms; as Dochiuko, or occasioned by burial in the earth; as Suichiuko, or the effect of submersion in water; again as Fuimako, or the result of wind and rain, and likewise as Sekikanko, or affected by long seclusion in sarcophagi or "stone boxes." Of the last mentioned he says: "Their patina shows a black or quicksilver-like verdigris-green very much like that of the kingfisher." Five wine vessels and foodholders in this collection are believed by Mr. Okazaki to come from the beginning of the Sung period, a thousand years before Christ. A fine wine pitcher with bronze handle, the ends shaped into the head of an animal with long ears, which the Chinese understood to be a tiger; a plain eared tripod with brilliant iridescent patina, a broad jar covered with the conventional incised decorations we often see copied on porcelain jars of late centuries, a richly decorated wine receiver with broad double handles and curious modelings in high relief, representing, so the Chinese say, the conventionalised face of some prehistoric Glutton or drunkard—these are some of the pieces assigned to the Sung kings.

It was difficult to obtain these old bronzes and potteries in China owing to the nervousness of the people when any one begins digging. They are sometimes got from farmers who have found them when at work. Such excavations as are made by the agents of dealers are conducted at night. The two collections are very rare and should be examined before the loans are withdrawn from the museum.

CAVE CANEM, SAY THESE.

A Morningside Heights St. Bernard That Seems to Need Discipline.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I wish to call the attention of all persons on Morningside Heights, and especially about the university, or those likely to walk there with a pet dog, to a dangerous St. Bernard dog of the neighborhood. The brute is allowed to go about unmuzzled, and is likely to leap upon any smaller dog and devour it. Catching sight of this St. Bernard one day when it was still fifteen or twenty yards distant on the open street, I made haste to lift my fox terrier into my arms and turn rapidly back to a place of safety, but before I had taken two steps the great dog rushed up behind me and made a grab at the dog in my arms. Fighting him off as well as I could with my elbow, as he stood on his hind feet, I succeeded in thwarting him for the moment, whereupon he turned his teeth upon me, tearing the sleeve of my coat and lacerating the skin, before a boy of the family that owns him came up and whipped him off. Men who wish to enter the perilous district will probably arm themselves.

ERNEST INGERSOLL.

50 Morningside Avenue, New York, May 9, 1905.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I read in to-day's TIMES that five were bitten by a dog. There is hardly a day passing by witnout such accidents, and the authorities do not seem to care much about it, while it is the easiest thing in the world to prevent it. What is the matter with that fellow on Twenty-sixth Street? There is a law that the stray dogs must be collected and the others muzzled or kept on a line. This law is openly violated. New York is dog-mad. Better to kill a score or two by hydrophobia than to inconvenience the dogs, they think.

MORNING.

The flower has heard the bluebell ring—
Risen and dressed at the soft alarm;
The bee put his buckwheat breakfast down
Safe from the reach of marauding harm,
Still sleeps my jewel of priceless worth,
Still over her eyes the lashes drowse;
Ah, whisper not, for she said last night
"Begobs! Call Jave if you wake me now."

PERIODICAL PUBLISHERS ENTERTAIN 300 GUESTS

Authors, Artists, Editors, Public Men at Lakewood Dinner.

ADE ON INDIANA'S OUTPUT

Says 22,837 Hoosiers Are Engaged in Literary Work—Melville E. Stone and Dr. Abbott Speak.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., May 12.—The Periodical Publishers' Association to-night entertained, at its second annual dinner, more than 300 editors, authors, artists, and public men. The Laurel in the Pines was entirely given over to the publishers and those enjoying their hospitality.

There were several chartered trains from New York bearing members of the association and their guests and special cars were run from Philadelphia, Washington, and other points.

A reception preceded the dinner. The dining room was handsomely decorated with cut flowers. The menus were in the form of dainty, beautifully printed magazines, well worthy of preservation as souvenirs.

When the elaborate bill of fare had received full justice, Frank N. Doubleday, the President of the association, made a brief speech. He was frequently interrupted by applause. He introduced Dr. Hamilton Wright Mabie as toastmaster. Dr. Mabie was at his best, his introductions of the several speakers, with personal hits, being a feature of the occasion.

George Ade, author and playwright, was the first speaker called upon to respond to the toast, "The Business End of a Periodical from the Author's Standpoint," his patriotism asserted itself, and before he was fairly launched on his remarks he was singing the praises of Indiana as the fountain spring of modern literature.

"I think I am an author because I am from Indiana," he said. "Every Hoosier is an author by instinct. You gentlemen are in the publishing business, and no doubt you are looking for hot stuff. If so, do not worry for another moment. I bring you tidings of great joy. There are now being incubated in the State of Indiana enough manuscripts to keep all of you going for the next ten years. Every Summer the authors of Indiana meet at Eagle Lake. They assemble in the open air because there is no building in the State large enough to hold all of them.

INDIANA'S ROLL OF AUTHORS.

"You know how many authors we have in Indiana. I do not speak at haphazard. I make no careless estimate. I give you the figures compiled by the Society of Authors, and we have in Indiana 22,837 authors, classified as follows:

"Historical novelists, 8,903; dialect poets, 6,397; magazine poets, 1,625; real poets, 430; dramatists, 1,216; syndicate humorists, 674; short story writers, 3,532.

"We can give you anything you want. If you wish the scholarly essay, with a dash of statesmanship and politics, go down into the Beveridge belt, where The Saturday Evening Post is a household word, where John Hay started and where Schuyler Colfax, Benjamin Harrison, and Daniel W. Voorhees labored. There you can get an essay while you wait. If you wish a novel with burning love interest go and inspect what is known as the Tarkington outcrop in and around Marion County. Here you will find F. Meredith Nicholson, Charles Major, and hundreds of others, each writing the book of the year.

"Northwest of Marion County you will find the McCutcheon family, and eight members of the McCutcheon family are now writing and illustrating for Dodd, Mead & Company. They have day and night shifts, each author working eight hours.

"South of this tribe and east of Indianapolis is the romantic novel region made famous by Gen. Lew Wallace. Maurice Thompson, Will Thompson, David Graham Phillips, Matty Hartwell Catherwood and countless others. John Clark Ridpath of Greek Castle is one of the few authors that has now become a permanent industry. He wrote school histories and sold them to college students for 50 cents a copy, and afterward it was discovered that by putting in Christy pictures and distorting minor incidents the books could be sold for $1.50 on all trains and newsstands.

"The present activity in the region between Vermilion and Posey is something unprecedented, and every young man in this region says: 'Well, if Tarkington and the McCutcheon boys can get away with it, there's a chance for me.'

CAN HEAR ROMANCES GROW.

"Go through any village in the corn belt on a peaceful Summer evening and you will hear from out of the vague somewhere a low, buzzing sound. At first you will think it is the dynamo of an electric lighting station. Not so. It is some sixteen-year-old maiden thinking out a romance. Next year she will have her pictures in The Bookman unless she is careful. Go south and west of Indianapolis and you are in the home of J. Whitcomb Riley, Tod Sloan, and 'Kid' McCoy. I will not burden you further. Suffice is to say that whatever you want you can get it in Indiana."

Mr. Ade was frequently interrupted by laughter and was warmly applauded when he concluded.

TOAST DRUNK TO PRESIDENT.

President Doubleday proposed a toast to the President of the United States when the tables were cleared, and it was drunk standing.

"We are here as good fellows to meet good fellows," he said, "for twenty-four hours, during which authors will not do publishers and publishers will be too busy to try to do authors. We are lions who will not bit or growl.

"The last dinner of this association was in Washington," said Hamilton W. Mabie. "It was a momentous affair. Theodore Roosevelt, who was soon to be elected President, was there. It is astonishing how much interest is taken in literature in this country and how much ignorance there is regarding it. The other day I was talking about Dr. Johnson and the man I was talking to said 'He is dead, isn't he?' [Laughter.]

"Magazines are the advance guard of literature. They contain much trash—pure rubbish—but there is much good in them also. There are few things we cannot find in an up-to-date magazine."

Dr. Mabie told a story of a woman who boasted that she could "read Henry James in the original." He won an outburst of laughter. He said that the distinguishing feature of the magazine of to-day was its minute picturing of life. He told a Mark Twain story which made a hit. When the humorist was presented to the Czar he said he felt lonely. He took out a cigar, pulled its red band off, and stuck it in his buttonhole. "What order of nobility does that represent?" a courtier asked.

"The Independent Order of American Journalists," Twain replied.

Dr. Lyman Abbott recalled the birth of the magazine in America, when there was but one, and it had a circulation of but 40,000. Now there are eighteen or twenty magazines, he said, with a circulation of 5,000,000. The Doctor had something to say of the daily press.

"Its influence is overestimated," he declared, "just as the influence of the magazine is underrated. I do not believe it is in the power of any paper to blast the reputation of any man unless it has the co-operation of the man himself. If a man is attacked silence is his best defense."

THE WORLD'S GREAT FORCES.

"If the attack is a lie it won't stick. If there is truth in it the less said about it the better. The newspaper is losing influence because it is read less carefully now than it once was at breakfast or in the street car. The magazine is read after the day's work is done. The newspaper is invaluable in the rôle of a news gatherer. The five great forces of the world are the pulpit, the school, the library and periodical press, and the daily press."

In introducing Dr. Abbott, Dr. Mabie said:

"I could introduce him in so many ways that I feel almost as embarrassed as the toastmaster who introduced a noted Irishman as 'The Father of Chemistry and Brother of the Earl of Cork.'"

Charles Battell Loomis made no attempt to deliver a fixed address. Instead he told funny stories. As each tale won him round after round of applause and volleys of laughter

Frank E. Bond, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, spoke on the dealings of the Government with the Indians. "We are not so black as they had been painted," Indian Commissioners, as a rule, were all doing their very best. The Indian of to-day, he said, has the intellect of a twelve-year-old child. His ethics are the ethics of Troy. "In every Indian community we have an Agamemnon, an Achilles, a Helen, a Hector, a Paris, and all the rest of them."

"I come as a taunt and a gibe from your arch enemy, the daily newspaper press," said Melville Stone, General Manager of The Associated Press, "which day by day invades your field, usurps your functions, and drives you to undeserved destruction. Yet you have my sympathy. I would speak some words to you on the disadvantages of our modern civilization, and there are disadvantages. Even our great effort for the betterment of our people is not good.

"You cannot pour clear water into a cesspool without tainting the pure water. Education by newspaper reading has its value—its moral effect. It holds wrongdoers to a sense of their responsibility. In the end it will do great good and score a great ethical purpose. But education by the newspapers alone will not do. It is superficial and inadequate."

Mr. Stone defended the newspaper and its relations to the people. "I have seen the journalistic magazine," he said, "replace the review, and the Sunday newspaper is now replacing the magazine. There is work for both to do—responsibility upon all who minister to the intellectual needs of the people."

F. Hopkinson Smith convulsed his hearers by the sad story in dialect of a Virginian potentate who found himself impoverished at the close of the war. His "niggers torn from him and his land taken away by ungentlemanly foreclosure proceedings."

"I said to myself, 'So the tale goes. Brace up. You've reached a crisis in your life. You've got to go to work. You whose ancestors owned all this part of Virginia before the cruel war.' I did not know law or medicine, so I went into the livery stable business."

The methods of working the stable as described by Mr. Smith created gales of laughter.

The publishers and those who have been the recipients of their hospitality will leave for New York to-morrow afternoon. Several special trains have been engaged for their accommodation.

Holman F. Day spoke from the author's standpoint in humorous vein. Prof. Thomas H. Lounsbury also spoke.

The officers of the association were assisted in their work of entertainment by a dinner committee representing nearly every prominent periodical and magazine in the country. The officers are:

ACADEMY OF DESIGN PRIZES.

Annual Awards Made to Students of Schools.

Students of the schools of the National Academy of Design received the annual award of prizes last evening at the rooms of the Architectural League, 215 West Fifty-seventh Street. One of the pleasant features of the distribution of awards, President Dielman, who presided, said, was the unanimous agreement of the other students with the selections made by the council. Following the distribution of prizes addresses were made by several of the Academicians present.

"I can comfort those who have not received prizes to-night," said Carroll Beckwith, who was the first speaker. "In the two years in which I was working hard in the academy schools, 1871-2, I did not get a reward of any kind, and yet I have gone on in my work and been able to support myself."

Following is a list of the prize winners and those receiving honorable mention: Norman Ray Thurston, Josephine E. Irwin, Ruby Murray, Charles T. Lepreaux, Anne Hoag, Leighton Smith, Mario Zimmermann, Harry Harold Aronson, Ethel M. Cooney, Nathalie M. Chadwick, Herman Ambauer, Edward Schell, William J. Quinlan, William Levy, A. Wolfson, Carl Wendell Rawson, Leo Stahr, George R. Kirchner, Jessie Banks, A. Warchowsky, A. L. Kroll, Marguerite M. Reuwee, William A. Breithaupt, Nell Eckerson, May Cowen, Salvatori Lascari, Alexander Schwatte, Samuel Cahan, and D. B. Dawes.

MRS. ROOSEVELT RECEIVES.

Garden Party Given at White House in Honor of Railway Congress.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—A reception and garden party given by Mrs. Roosevelt in the grounds of the White House constituted the feature in to-day's proceedings in the International Railway Congress. President Roosevelt attended the reception, as did Vice President and Mrs. Fairbanks, the members of the President's Cabinet who are in the city, and their wives, and the members of the Diplomatic Corps, as well as officers of the army and navy and distinguished citizens of the city.

The last session of the congress will be held to-morrow afternoon. The indications are that the next session, five years hence, will be held in Switzerland.

To-night the Ambassador received this telegram from Secretary Hay at Bad Nauheim:

"Cordial felicitations on your promotion and profound personal regrets at your departure."

COACHING CLUB OFF ON A FOUR-DAY JAUNT

Trip to Blairsden and Return on the Defiance.

WELL-KNOWN WHIPS TO DRIVE

Two Days Will Be Spent on the Road Each Way, with Rests at Tuxedo and Blairsden.

The Coaching Club party, which is to make a two days' trip on the Defiance to Blairsden, started at 1:55 yesterday from the Metropolitan Club, Sixtieth Street and Fifth Avenue. James Henry Smith, T. Suffern Tailer, and C. Ledyard Blair were the hosts, and in the party were Robert D. Gerry, E. T. H. Talmage, Peter Goelet Gerry, E. Victor Loew, S. Le Grand Cromwell, Oliver S. Jennings, Reginald W. Rives, and W. G. Loew. Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt was to have been of the party, but he tooled the Pioneer to Ardsley from the Holland House yesterday. On his return he will join the others at Tuxedo.

Yesterday's itinerary was of thirty-six and one-half miles, with these stages: Sixtieth Street, North River, Weehawken, Hackensack, Hohokus, Suffern, and Tuxedo Park. At Tuxedo the party were the guests, at the club, of Messrs. Smith and Tailer. The itinerary for to-day is Tuxedo, Ringwood, Boardville, Midvale, Wanaque, Pompton Plains, Pequannock, Wayne, Fairfield, Pine Brook, Troy Hills, Whippany, Monroe, Morristown, Bernardsville, and Blairsden, the time being from 10:36 A. M. to 5:40 P. M. At Blairsden the host will be Mr. Blair, who will entertain the party over Sunday. The home trip of eighty-eight miles will be made on Monday and Tuesday.

Hosts and guests rendezvoused early in the afternoon at the Metropolitan Club. The Defiance came round from Mr. Vanderbilt's stables, in East Thirty-third Street, half an hour before the start. The vehicle is a very modest but stanch rig, in yellow and black, with comfortable gray upholstering. On the back was:

DEFIANCE,
BLAIRSDEN,
NEW YORK.

The starting team was furnished by Mr. Vanderbilt, and was a quartet that looked businesslike and fast. The near wheeler was a dappled sorrel, Portsmouth Clean Sweep, to piebald the team; the off-wheeler a bay, Valiant; the near leader a bay, Leader, and the off-leader a very handsome and natty chestnut mare, Actress, in the charge of Tom Wilson and Louis Gottlieb, who brought them back from Hackensack last night. Harry Thomas was the guard.

The Defiance's passengers were on the coach at 1:54 o'clock, and one minute later T. Suffern Tailer got on the box beside Mr. Blair, took the reins, twirled his whip, and the team started down Fifth Avenue. The teams for the trip will be furnished as follows:

Messrs. Blair and Smith, two each; Col. Jay, the Gerrys, and Messrs. Talmage, Cromwell, Jennings, Vanderbilt, and Tailer, one each. Sixteen hours will be used in the trip to Tuxedo and thirty-two hours in that to Blairsden.

"The days' outing is a novelty in the trips of the Coaching Club. They began by a jaunt to Philadelphia in 1878, and yesterday's trip is the twenty-third. In 1892 the longest ride on record was made, when the objective point was W. Seward Webb's Vermont country seat, Shelburne Farms, 317½ miles away. Four days were consumed in the journey and eighty horses were used. Gayle Blair was the host of 1904 in an outing to Peapack, N. J. Tuxedo was the coaching goal in 1889 and 1903.

The ribbon handlers on the present jaunt are Messrs. Tailer, Jennings, Smith, R. L. Gerry, P. G. Gerry, Talmage, Cromwell, Blair, and Vanderbilt.

LAMBS GIVE LADIES' GAMBOL.

Well-Filled House Applauds Clever and Varied Entertainment.

The Lambs gave their "Ladies' Annual Gambol" yesterday afternoon at the Lyric Theatre. The house was well filled with women, who lent much color to the scene with strikingly smart gowns.

The programme was one of gayety, and consisted of the following: A comedy sketch called "Jim Hickey," written by George V. Hobart, led off the entertainment. Then Eugene Cowles sang a number of songs. A sketch by George Ade, one of the hits of the afternoon, called "Marso Covington," followed, in which Wilton Lackaye did clever work. Clay Greene was the next entertainer. A pleasing variation was a 'cello solo by Victor Herbert. The first part of the programme concluded with a skit called "As a Man Sows."

Following the intermission eight of the Lambs appeared in a dance which was named "My Colored Queen of May." It was uproariously funny, and part of it burlesqued Col. Bordeverry's feat of shooting off his wife's dress. Henry Mayer then gave a number of caricature impersonations, followed by Edwin Stevens, who appeared in "A Night Off." The last of the entertainment was a musical play entitled "On the Firing Line," the music by William T. Francis and the book by Clay M. Greene.

Matinee for Mrs. Gilbert Fund.

At the Madison Square Theatre yesterday afternoon Ibsen's "The Master Builder" was played by a special cast of actors who volunteered their services, the purpose of the matinée being to raise funds for the Mrs. Gilbert testimonial. Possibly $200 was taken in for tickets and in subscriptions. The money is to be used for a stained-glass window. Among those who appeared were William Hazeltine, Douglas Wood, Amy Ricard, Lottie Alter, and Ida Jeffries-Goodfriend.

CHURCH HOUSE FOR BRONX.

Bishop Greer Selects Site in Crotona Park—A Novel Feature.

A site for a church house of the Bronx, to cost $100,000, and to be the headquarters of work of the Episcopal Church in Bronx Borough, was decided on yesterday. Bishop Greer made the decision and placed the house in Crotona Park, near Borough Hall. The Bishop announced that the funds to build the house are in hand, and that it was his purpose to secure an endowment for it.

The church house will contain a novel feature. This will be a sort of hotel, where deacons and deaconesses will live. It is Bishop Greer's idea to make the Bronx a sort of training school or post graduate course of the seminaries, where practical work will be done by deacons before entering the priesthood.

KILTIES HELP THE POLICE.

Form Hollow Square to Force Crowd Away from Injured Man.

David Jarr, a waiter living at 202 West End Avenue, stepped from a south-bound car at Broadway and Sixty-fifth Street last night, and was hit by a car coming in the opposite direction. Jarr's foot was crushed, and he was otherwise injured. Bicycle Policeman Kupfrain upon learning of the accident ran to a telephone and called for an ambulance. When he returned he found the injured man surrounded by a crowd of several hundred men and women. He tried to force an aisle through the crowd so that the ambulance might reach the scene, but the crowd would not budge.

Just then the company of Highlanders from Hamilton appeared upon the scene. They have been camping in the Twenty-second Regiment Armory on Broadway, near the scene of the accident, and were about to start for the military show at Madison Square Garden. Noticing the trouble the bicycle policeman was having with the crowd, the Captain of the Highlanders asked if the company could be of any assistance.

"Yes," answered the policeman, "if you can make room for the ambulance I would appreciate it."

Thereupon the Highland Captain formed a hollow square with his men pressing the crowd back to the curb, so that the ambulance surgeon was enabled to pick up the injured man.

CHILD AN ENVOY OF CUPID.

Daughter Finds a Wife for Baseball Catcher Lawson.

Special to The New York Times.

DES MOINES, Iowa, May 12.—Responding to the earnest pleadings of his five-year-old daughter Edna, Henry M. Lawson, late catcher of the New York National baseball team, led Miss Lillian Mayme Shoemaker to the altar to-night. This terminates an episode unique in the life of romance.

On Wednesday Lawson and his little daughter came to Des Moines and registered at the Lakota Hotel. Fifteen minutes later little Edna pointed out Miss Shoemaker, the hotel stenographer, as the lady whom she would like to have for a "new mamma."

Before supper hour Wednesday evening Lawson had met Miss Shoemaker. Yesterday afternoon the couple were engaged. To-night the Rev. E. T. Hagerman of the First Methodist Episcopal Church performed the wedding ceremony.

Miss Shoemaker is the daughter of a well-to-do Iowa farmer. She came to Des Moines because her home life was "too monotonous." She says she will play with Edna while her husband resumes his favorite work upon the diamond.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

The wedding of Miss Sara Means, niece of Mrs. James D. Layng, and Vivian Spencer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Spencer of Washington, will take place on June 3 at Sengahurst, the country home of the Laynga, at Mount Kisco. Mr. Spencer's father, Samuel Spencer, who is President of the Southern Railway, gave a large dinner on Wednesday night in Washington, many of his guests being delegates to the Railway Congress. Among these were Sir Cuthbert Eish, Sir Evelyn Cecil, Sir Charles Owen, Sir Francis Mowatt, Sir George Armitage, and George Westinghouse.

Lady Durand and Miss Josephine Durand have left Washington and opened their country home at Lenox. Sir Mortimer Durand will join them there on his return from England.

John D. Crimmins and his family have opened their country seat, Firwood, at Noroton, Conn.

Mrs. Ferguson L. Cooper will give a bridge party this afternoon at her residence, 111 East Fifty-fourth Street. Many of the former members of the whist club so successfully inaugurated by Mrs. Richard S. Dana will be among the guests.

Mrs. James Speyer gave a small luncheon yesterday at Sherry's, and afterward, with some of her guests, went to the Japanese tableaux. Among her guests were Mrs. Richard Irvin, Mrs. C. B. Alexander, Mrs. Wadsworth, and Miss Flood.

Booked to sail to-day on the Finland, for Dover and Antwerp, are Major Colin Campbell and Mrs. Campbell, (Miss Nancy Lee.) Mrs. L. Jacqueline Smith, Miss Gladys Jacquelin Smith, and Mrs. Dean Sage of Albany.

Mr. and Mrs. Bradley Martin, Jr., (Miss Helen Phipps,) and Mrs. Martin's sister, Miss Amy Phipps, are booked on the New York, sailing to-day, as are also Mrs. Victor Sorchan and Mrs. Egerton L. Winthrop, Jr.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Bayard Cutting are booked to sail on Saturday next, and Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Gould on May 24.

Mr. and Mrs. Ormsby Wilson, who were the guests in Washington of Mr. and Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, have returned to town.

Ambassador Reid, Mrs. Reid, and Miss Jean Reid are the guests at Florham, Madison, of Mr. and Mrs. H. McK. Twombly.

Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt have booked passage to Europe on Tuesday next. Mrs. T. J. Oakley Rhinelander has booked her passage for May 27; she is going to join her mother, Mrs. Charles Sands, in Paris.

At the garden party on May 23 at Governor's Island for the benefit of the New York branch of the Army Relief Society there is to be, besides a parade, a sham battle. Tents will be put up between the trees on the campus and refreshments will be served. The hours are from 2 to 6, and tickets, including admission, may be obtained from Mrs. Daniel S. Lamont, Mrs. Henry S. Bischoff, and Mrs. Charles F. Roe.

Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont are the guests at Hempstead of August Belmont.

TRINITY'S OLD CLOCK HAS STRUCK ITS LAST

Men Are Now Removing Works That Weigh Four Tons.

HAS BEEN ERRATIC OF LATE

New Timepiece Is Guaranteed to Run for 200 Years—Will Strike Old Chimes.

The old clock in the steeple of Trinity is to give way to a modern timepiece to tell the time to Wall Street and lower Broadway.

The first intimation that anything serious was wrong with the old clock was four years ago this Summer, on the night when the change in the motive power of the Broadway road from cable to electricity was made. William Broughton, the sexton, who lives close to the old church, was awakened by the continuous ringing of the big bell that announced the hours.

When he realized that midnight had sounded about a dozen times he hurried to the belfry. One of the automatic clutches which stops the hammer was broken. Since then the old clock has been erratic. Sometimes it would forget that it was its duty to ring the quarter hours, and more recently it seemed to forget the hours.

Constant tinkering could not make the clock reliable. It seemed to fall asleep in the roar of the city, and proved as uncertain as the stock quotations. Sometimes it would wake up to work at a furious rate, and yesterday it died, after a feeble effort to toll the big bell, in surrender to the inevitable.

George Witham, an expert of the E. Howard Clock Company, 41 and 43 Maiden Lane, performed the autopsy and found that death was due to a complication of disorders, chiefly broken cogs in the clock's interior. Yesterday began the removal of the four tons of works. They are not to be sold as junk, but will be preserved by the Trinity Corporation as relics of other days.

In the place of the old clock a new one of brass, steel, zinc and lead is to be installed. Its makers guarantee that it will tick regularly for 200 years. The old clock, made in England, started time keeping in 1826. Its various parts were made at the forge and the blacksmith shop, the work was well done, but the makers of the new clock assert that the modern method, by which the clock is largely made by machine, with mathematically cut grooves, will make the new clock more accurate than its predecessor.

The new timepiece will weigh three tons less than the old, and instead of requiring four hours to wind it every week, with two men working at the 4½-foot crank, the work can be done in half an hour by one man. Steel and beaten brass are used to avoid extra friction. The 16-foot pendulum is made of zinc and iron.

The old clock was known among the men who work about the church as a "killer." J. Spiere, who used to take care of the clock, died a few weeks ago from heart disease, as a result, it is said, of his labors in winding it. Repairers who have from time to time worked on the clock have had a superstitious dread of it.

Mr. Witham, who is in charge of the forces removing the old works, said yesterday in connection that he had no fear of evil consequences, but that his faithful watch had stopped just as he began the job. Witham cannot repair his own watch. Once he was skilled at that sort of work, but his fingers have become clumsy in repairing big clocks in the various cities of the United States.

"You see," he said, "one cannot repair a watch with a sledge hammer, and that is the way we have to go about the big fellows."

"The chimes will ring the same old tune of the passing time, but the tone will be a little different and a good deal louder. The new hammers will be much heavier than the old ones."

THIS is one of the oldest and most famous brands of the world. For nearly a hundred years it has been considered in Havana itself as representing the very highest type of cigar excellence produced in Cuba.

Up to a few years ago it had, however, been little known in this country, almost the entire output having been taken by connoisseurs in England and Spain.

It has recently been introduced to the American market in the new "Army Sizes" as follows:

Lieutenants	Majors
Captains	Colonels
Adjutants	Generals

The names indicate the relative sizes. All are made in the straight, square-ended shape.

We offer choice selections of the very finest colors, especially chosen for our own selling.

CHEER LORD BRASSEY AT JESUP LUNCHEON

Distinguished Englishman Entertained at Chamber of Commerce.

KEEP TOGETHER, HE SAYS

Thinks United States and England Will Demand Open Door When the War Ends.

Lord Brassey, who has come to New York on his yacht, the Sunbeam, to take part in the transatlantic race for a cup given by Emperor William, was the guest of President Morris K. Jesup of the Chamber of Commerce at a luncheon in the Chamber yesterday afternoon. When a delegation from the New York Chamber of Commerce visited England in 1900 Lord Brassey, who was then President of the London Chamber, received the delegation at his London house.

President Jesup gave yesterday's luncheon in his personal capacity. The members of the Chamber, a number of friends of Lord Brassey, and the local representatives of the British Government were the guests.

Mr. Jesup introduced Lord Brassey with a few words.

The guest of honor, who was very cordially received, began his address by recalling the part played by the New York Chamber of Commerce in dispelling the cloud that four years ago threatened the friendly relations between the United States and England.

"It is most true to say," continued Lord Brassey, "it is most true to say that we are proud of the splendid achievements of a people largely descended from ourselves. We admire the energy and fertility of resource with which you have opened up boundless territories, widely differing in climate, in soil, and all capable of yielding to labor and to skill products of all kinds, and much needed to supply the wants of man. We admire your Government—we admire your President—we admire the immense powers and capacity of your men of business. In another order of ideas we love your literature.

"Is it not a natural prompting on both sides, as it is our wisest policy, to keep together? And surely it is a happy circumstance, and favorable to common action, that we have no conflicting interests. With mingled feelings of pity for suffering and admiration for valor and devotion, we are all spectators of that terrible conflict in the Far East. Great change must follow, and in those changes the interests of our two countries are involved. As traders and producers we could not suffer ourselves to be excluded from past markets, to which the railway and the steamships are now only beginning to give access. We ask for the open door. We ask for nothing more. To a request so reasonable, backed by two navies, which, combined, are invincible, who should say no?

"If one closing word, the unity of all English-speaking men is the most sure guarantee for peace, for equal justice among nations, for the progress of arbitration, for the general happiness of mankind. Let us as Chambers of Commerce in New York as in London do our utmost to promote it."

There was great applause when Lord Brassey concluded his speech. Three cheers for him were given at the suggestion of Mr. Jesup. All those present then shook hands with him.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Thomas Frederick Williams.

Thomas Frederick Williams, for thirty-five years on the staff of The New York Sun, died at his home on Staten Island on Thursday. He was born in Ireland sixty-three years ago, and came to this country in early manhood. He was private secretary to Gen. O. O. Howard during the trying days of the Freedman's Bureau. He later served Charles A. Dana in the same capacity until Mr. Dana died in 1897.

"Skipper" Williams, as he was generally known, because of his love for the water, was an expert on fishing matters. He was so well known to harbor craft that many skippers saluted him when he appeared in his boat. He was deeply interested in the Fenian cause, and was one of a party fired on by a British man-of-war for taking down the Union Jack on Indian Island.

E. D. T. Myers.

RICHMOND, Va., May 12.—Major E. D. T. Myers, President of the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad, died this morning. Major Myers was taken suddenly ill on Monday night with heart trouble. His physicians attribute the attack largely to his trip to Washington to bring to this city the body of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee. Major Myers was born in Virginia on July 13, 1830. He was at work on the Washington aqueduct when the civil war broke out and came immediately to Richmond and served in the Engineering Corps of the Confederate States. He leaves two sons and one daughter.

William H. Hyatt.

William H. Hyatt, President of the Brass Manufacturing Company, died yesterday at the age of eighty at his home, 262 Garfield Place, Brooklyn. He was one of the "Argonauts" who, in 1849, went to California for gold, but he stayed there only a brief while. Returning to New York, he entered the hardware trade, in which he continued until his death. He leaves two sons and two daughters. The funeral will take place on Monday.

Joseph Jacobson.

Word was received in the city yesterday of the death in Chicago of Joseph Jacobson, 68 years old, who had long been well known in the clothing trade. Mr. Jacobson was a Director of several clothing companies, and was Treasurer of Alfred Benjamin & Co. and James Smith & Co. of 51 Lafayette Place. Mr. Jacobson had lived at the Ansonia for two years.

Judge Charles B. Bellinger.

PORTLAND, Ore., May 12.—Judge Charles B. Bellinger of the United States District Court died to-day. He was appointed to the Federal bench in 1893. The trial of United States Senator Mitchell for alleged participation in land frauds was in progress in Judge Bellinger's court when the Judge was stricken last month.

Obituary Notes.

EDWIN A. BUCK, formerly Connecticut State Treasurer, died yesterday at Willimantic of grip. Mr. Buck was a cousin of Philip D. Armour. He was seventy-three years old.

EMERSON E. BENNETT, a writer and composer, died yesterday at the Masonic Home in Philadelphia, aged eighty-three years. Bennett was born at Monson, Mass. Among his song productions were "A Prairie Flower" and "Leni Leoto."

De Peyster Burial at Trinity.

The body of Frederic de Peyster will be buried at noon to-day in the family vault in Trinity Churchyard, which bears the date of 1768. The last of the de Peysters to be buried in the old churchyard was Robert J. L. de Peyster, who was buried on [illegible]. The PRIVATE BANKER ASSIGNS.

Albert C. Wilcox Has House Here and Ten Branches, It Is Said.

Albert C. Wilcox, doing business as A. C. Wilcox & Co., private bankers at 55 Liberty Street and at various towns in the State, made an assignment yesterday to Marcus A. Alexander. He began business in this city in February, 1900, as A. C. Wilcox & Co., and since then has established branch houses throughout the State, in Orange and Sullivan Counties, at Rouse's Point, Painted Post, N. Y., and Windsor Locks, Conn. A year ago, it was said, he had ten branch banks. He never had any rating at Bradstreet's. His statement of Feb. 1, 1904, placed his resources at $554,244, liabilities, $193,905; capital, $300,000; surplus, $50,000, and undivided profits, $10,283.

He was interested in a bank at Cornwall, N. Y., which was chartered on July 25, 1904, as the First National Bank of Cornwall, with an authorized capital stock of $25,000, of which, it was said, $15,000 had been paid in. He became President and Marcus A. Alexander Vice President.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Marble Font Floor Dutiable at 50 Per Cent.—Other Decisions.

In a decision written by General Appraiser McClelland, the Board of United States General Appraisers yesterday overruled a protest filed by Kronfeld, Saunders & Co., New York, and held that a marble font floor is properly dutiable, as assessed by Collector Stranahan, as a manufacture of marble at the rate of 50 per cent. ad valorem. The flooring was imported in pieces, and on that account was claimed by the importers to be dutiable at only 12 cents per cubic foot. The General Board upholds the classification imposed by the Collector, and denies the claims of the importing firm.

Judge Waite wrote a decision sustaining protests filed by Quong Yuen & Co. and many other Chinese and Japanese importers at Chicago relative to the rate of duty applicable to dried mushrooms packed in zinc packages. The Collector of Customs at Chicago has for a considerable time been exacting duty on the mushrooms under the provision in the Dingley tariff law for "prepared vegetables," with duty at the rate of 40 per cent. ad valorem. The board finds that the mushrooms in question are properly dutiable at the rate of 35 per cent. ad valorem, as it has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of the customs court that the articles are entitled to the lower rates provided for vegetables in their natural state.

Other importers' claims sustained yesterday by the General Board were by the Southern Pacific Company, San Francisco; Ernest Villers and De Blanc, New Orleans; John Wo, Portland, Oregon; Pitt & Scott, Limited; R. Gunthel, S. Herbert, R. C. Hahn, Samuel Schiff & Co., New York.

Protests partially sustained were by Sullivan, Drew & Co., Simpson, Crawford & Simpson, A. D. Matthews & Sons, Samuel Schiff & Co., the Leon Rheims Company, R. C. Hahn, New York.

The board overruled claims made by M. R. Young, Ogdensburg, N. Y.; Southern Bagging Company, Norfolk, Va.; the Weideman Company, Burley & Co., Chicago; H. Hamano, Honolulu; F. Hollander & Co., New Orleans; Moses Norris, Baltimore; Charles Hessler and others San Francisco; A. H. Robertson, D. S. Hesse & Brother, Veit, Son & Co., Park & Tilford, Acker, Merrall & Condit Company, Wood & Selick, John C. Mahr & Son, New York.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

Safford referee, in the matter and set down the return day on the order to show cause for Aug. 11. The company was incorporated on Nov. 7, 1904, with a capital stock of $25,000, but only $1,600 is outstanding now. A. N. Jacob became President and Treasurer and Martin McInerney Secretary. The business did not pay, and it was decided to go into liquidation. The liabilities are $15,305, and assets $10,305. A. N. Jacob is a creditor for $8,031, and Sargent & Co. $2,919.

The liabilities were $104,463 and assets $74,000.

G. ROTHSTEIN & CO.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against George Rothstein and Bertha Friedman, who compose the firm of G. Rothstein & Co., manufacturers of children's clothing at 179 Greene Street, by the following creditors: State Bank, $1,500, on a note of M. Rothstein, who committed suicide on April 15, indorsed by the firm; Broadway Trust Company, $1,000, note of the firm indorsed by M. Rothstein, and the Columbia Bank, $1,000 on a note of the firm, indorsed by M. Rothstein. It is alleged that the firm is insolvent and committed an act of bankruptcy by having Max B. Friedman, husband of Bertha Friedman, appointed receiver on May 9 in the Supreme Court, which creditors say was collusive and to the detriment of creditors. Judge Holt of the United States District Court appointed Henry F. Butler receiver of the assets, fixing his bond at $3,000, on consent of both the defendants. Max B. Friedman, the receiver, also consented to turn over the assets to Mr. Butler.

SMITH & ROBINSON.—Julian C. Smith and Edward W. Robinson, who compose the firm of Smith & Robinson, general contractors for river and harbor improvements at 17 State Street, have filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $17,819 and assets of $5,515, consisting of machinery, lighters, office furniture, &c., $2,000; cash in bank, $548, and equities in contracts, $2,967. Among the creditors are the Mercantile National Bank, $4,000; Wendell F. Brown & Co., Boston, $1,646, and the Rockport (Mass.) Granite Company, $2,803. Mr. Smith has individual debts of $5,261 and assets of $6,001, consisting of cash, $1, and plant at Rohoboth, Del., $6,000, consisting of dredges, scows, &c. He was formerly in business in Baltimore. J., $600; cash in bank, $39; life insurance policy, $75, and thirty-five shares of stock of the People's Bank, pledged for a loan of $1,800. The firm of Smith, Robinson was formed on April 1, 1904, for the purpose of doing miscellaneous work on United States Government contracts.

EFFECT OF MINNIE HEALY DECISION ON HEINZE INTERESTS.
UNITED COPPER COMPANY.
The situation of the copper interests at Butte, Mont., the centre of probably the largest industry in the world, does not seem to be clearly understood. The interests practically on the one side belong to the Amalgamated Copper Company, which some years ago purchased from Marcus Daly and his partners the Anaconda, the Boston and Montana, and other properties, while on the other side are what is known as the Heinze properties, now owned by the United Copper Company.
The recent decision in the Minnie Healy case by the Supreme Court of the State of Montana has settled finally in favor of the United Copper Company, the only case in which the titles to their ground has been disputed. The result is that the United Copper Company, represented by F. Augustus Heinze, is now the undisputed owner of the richest properties in Butte. The fight has been a long one and has been against the enormous power of the Standard Oil and the Amalgamated, and been watched with the keenest interest from one end of the country to the other. The spectacle of one young man standing out alone against the great power of William Rockefeller and H. H. Rogers, and finally succeeding in the court of last resort in Montana, is one which has attracted the admiration of the whole country, and even of England and Germany, and is a great tribute to his courage and ability. Mr. Heinze is a man who, even his opponents admit, has the qualities of undisputed integrity, absolute fearlessness, and a thorough knowledge of the copper business.
The United Copper Company has now a production of thirty-six million pounds of copper per annum from undisputed ground of its own, upon which there is a net profit under Heinze's management of over 2.00 per pound. This production since the Minnie Healy decision will be increased to about forty-three million pounds per annum in about thirty days, which will amount to over two million dollars per annum net profit.
The United Copper Company has $880,000 in the treasury and is able to declare a dividend on the common stock this month. The amount of ore in sight owned by the United Copper Company is over $36,000,000 net and upon its capital of five millions preferred stock and forty-five millions of common stock, it certainly, under present conditions, should stand amongst the greatest of the copper producing companies of the world. The success of this corporation has been due to the following striking qualities, the thorough knowledge of the economic production of copper, and the reputation for personal integrity of Mr. F. Augustus Heinze, who is the President of the company, and who devotes all his time and energies to the actual management of this corporation at Butte.
The common stock of the United Copper Company stands to-day on the New York Curb at less than $25.00 per share; par value $100. It is obvious that it is now worth intrinsically above $70.00 per share, and will doubtless reach this point within sixty days. It is, however, expected to go much higher on the increased earnings since the Minnie Healy decision and the impending dividend on the common stock.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Strong; Call Money Easy, 2@2½ Per Cent.

The Improvement in Tone and Prices Continues, with Enlargement of Volume on Professional Activity.

It was even truer yesterday than on Thursday that minor considerations caused such market movement as there was. The foreign telegrams gave no decided impetus. Paris was idle, Berlin was firm, and London turned a good buyer when its local embarrassments came to a happy end by the conclusion of the settlement without any more failures. Its price changes were irregular upon Americans, but it was a buyer upon balance on a considerable scale. Our produce markets were rather negative in their interpretation of the crop report. Primary markets, nearer to the growing grain than ours and also nearer to the focus of speculation, were stronger than our own, which were unsteady and closed a fraction up for wheat and a fraction down for corn. There was "frost in Nebraska," and other farmers' troubles elsewhere, but these things are not convincing unless they come in a manner and from a source beyond dispute.

The most conspicuous movement of the day was the weakness of the local gas stocks upon the reduction of the dividend to 8 per cent. Not only are the reasons so specific as to be destitute of any generally depressing effect. The assigned causes are always subject to discount and attributed to some afterthought. However unjustly, advances and declines in these stocks are regarded as having reference to market commitments, often with motives impracticable to publish. Their falls are met with smiles and their advances are regarded with caution. They are amusing properties, but too vagarious for serious consideration as market signs. It is not at all admitted that they could not if they would pay their usual dividends if the reduction of the price of gas should become a law instead of a threat. The motive for reducing their distribution at the moment is too obvious to cause alarm among even their own shareholders.

The outlook for to-day's bank statement was somewhat obscure. More money has been received than was sent to the country, but a still larger sum was lost to the Sub-Treasury upon the Treasury's call for return of its deposits. It is difficult to reckon how these factors will average, or what the course of the loans will be under the week's conflicting movements in the stock market, but the money market betrayed only indifference.

These are conflicting as well as minor factors. The construction placed upon them was favorable upon the whole, and the volume of buying carried the business back to the million-share total. But it was professional buying, and the stocks taken may be expected to be thrown back again promptly if the rise continues, and quicker yet if prices soften. The sort of buying which gives stability to improvement was conspicuous for its absence.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Market Again Decidedly Bullish—Prices Go Up with Ease.

Market sentiment has apparently undergone a complete reversal this week, and the temper of the trading was again decidedly bullish yesterday. On the advance there was a marked revival of activity, due, it is believed, in a large measure to the covering by shorts. This buying played an important part in the market yesterday, and made it much easier for the bulls to advance prices. Floor traders reported that the nature of the buying continued "excellent," and Harriman brokers, so-called, were said to have been among the heaviest purchasers. The attitude of the Gates crowd appears to be really bullish. Those who are in the confidence of John W. Gates declare that his buying is based on information regarding favorable developments in the railroad situation. There is a suspicion, however, that the Gates buying did not originate on orders from Mr. Gates himself.

Hard to Buy Stocks.

Reports from the floor were to the effect that it was difficult to get stocks. Brokers who had orders for a few thousand shares had to do some active bidding in order to induce selling. It was also said that not much of the stock that came out on the advance was real long stock. Some of it represented short selling by traders who figured that the sharp advance would have to be followed by a reaction while some more stock represented profit taking on stuff bought on the decline further down.

Prices Go Up Easily.

To many observers it looked as if the market had caught its second breath, and the advances in many issues showed that those interested in them had secured renewed confidence in conditions. Many of the pools were active, and it was noticed that they did not have to take much stock in order to advance prices. Indeed, if anything, it appeared rather easier to mark up quotations than it had been just before the recent collapse, when the market was top-heavy. The supposed weakness of the pools had led to a good deal of short selling all the way down on the decline, and this short interest seemed to be willing to accept the forcibly tendered invitation to cover.

London a Heavy Purchaser.

London was a feature in the market because of its heavy purchases, which did much to sustain the advance. A good deal of this buying is believed to have been due to the selling of calls on American stocks. Several houses here have been purchasing calls in London during the last few days. Most of these were in Union Pacific, Atchison, and Steel preferred. Union Pacific calls, though, were expensive, being quoted at 7 per cent. When London sells a call on an American stock it generally buys back half of the amount as a "hedge." This accounted for a share of London's purchases in this market yesterday. It was recalled that heavy purchases of calls on Americans in London preceded the upward swing last Summer.

1,000,000 Shares Sold.

The total sales again exceeded 1,000,000 shares, and there were some transactions in large blocks. This was especially the case in Union Pacific, which led the market. When one block of 3,500 shares came out on the tape at 123½ a trader who was watching the tape remarked: "Hm, that must be a specialist investing his profits." Union Pacific ran up to 124½, thus disappointing some traders who had bet that it would touch 125 yesterday.

Gould Issues Advance.

The showing made by the Gould stocks was received with considerable satisfaction by the speculative community. Instead of hanging back, as they have been in the habit of doing, these issues advanced with the rest of the market on considerable activity. The leader in this group was St. Louis Southwestern preferred, which rose 4 points on some 7,000 shares. The advance in this stock was explained as due in part to the increased earnings justifying expectations for a dividend and in part to the prospects of a fine wheat crop. The improvement of wheat in the States from which the road draws most of its traffic was particularly marked in the recent Government crop report. Last year the crop was a general failure. Other Gould issues which showed strength were Missouri Pacific, Texas Pacific, and Wabash. They followed the lead of St. Louis Southwestern and advanced a point or more.

Pittsburg Coal Stocks.

The stocks of the Pittsburg Coal Company, which were listed on Wednesday last, have been active features of the trading on the Pittsburg Stock Exchange for some time, and it seems as if it were the desire of those interested in the property to establish a good market for them on the Stock Exchange here. It so happened that the announcement of the settlement of the "war" on Lake coal which had been waged between this company and M. A. Hanna & Co., came along the very day after the stock had been listed here, thus affording a good opportunity to show the confidence of those interested in the property. The Pittsburg Coal Company is one of the largest coal companies in the Pennsylvania District. It recently entered into a twenty-five year contract to supply the United States Steel Corporation with coal, which contract it is said, pays the company's fixed charges. The concern operates 150 mines and owns 100,000 acres of coal lands. It has paid dividends of 7 per cent. on its preferred stock.

Rumors Still Bloom.

That the recent storm in the financial district had not in the slightest damaged the crop of rumors was clearly shown yesterday. Every report that had been heard before the collapse bobbed up again. Railroad consolidations in the Northwest, arrangements of difficulties between big men, increased dividends, they were all trotted out, nicely brushed and groomed, though the fixing-up process they had undergone was not sufficient to disguise their age. Their whiskers would have been gray had they not been shaved.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, May 12.—There was less pressure for money in the market to-day, though the demand was fair for repayments to the Bank of England and for Stock Exchange requirements. Discounts were firm.

Prices on the Stock Exchange were steady and trading was slightly more active, the settlement concluding with no further difficulties. Consols hardened, on a small investment support.

Americans were more cheerful, in response to New York, and received fair support throughout the morning at above parity. Union Pacific and United States Steel were strong. Southern Pacific was bought, on favorable dividend rumors. In the afternoon trading was moderately active, and at the close prices were firm, though a little below the best quotations of the day.

Japanese improved during the early part of the day, but closed easier. Imperial Japanese Government 6s of 1904 were quoted at 100⅝. Russians were weak. Other Continentals were firm, in sympathy with Paris. Peruvians were the feature of foreigners, being supported on rumors of an arrangement of the national debt question.

Advance in Prices Accompanies Increased Activity.

United Copper Strong—Northerns Reset at Close—Safety Car Heating Earnings.

The tendency of prices in the outside market yesterday was upward in nearly all the active issues, and their strength was shared by a good many of the less conspicuous stocks. The dealings were not confined to as few issues as had monopolized the transactions on the earlier days of the week. The favorable conditions prevailing in the general market were utilized by a number of the pools to advance their specialties, and in most cases moderate improvement was brought about with very little effort. Early in the day Northern Securities was quite strong, showing at one time a gain of a point over the highest price of the previous day, but in the later trading the price receded 1½ points. Despite the large amount of Northern Securities stock that has been deposited for conversion, the trading yesterday showed a total larger than on any recent day. The stubs were fairly active at prices slightly below and slightly above 400.

UNITED COPPER continued to advance as if the pool in the stock were sure of its position and felt satisfied that the price could be put up without inviting too much profit taking. The stock sold as high as 25⅞ and closed within a quarter of a point of the highest. The preferred sold at 74. Sales were made of the dividend on United Copper common at 1 per cent. In some quarters the bid made for this prospective dividend was looked upon as an effort to bull the common stock. At the same time insiders close to the management of the company say that a dividend will be declared on the stock in the near future.

SAFETY CAR HEATING AND LIGHTING.—The annual statement of the Safety Car Heating and Lighting Company, published yesterday, showed for the year ended March 31 last gross income of $932,006 and net income of $789,928, as compared with $864,016 for the previous year and $675,792 two years ago. The Pintsch Company showed a net income of $593,912 and a surplus of $328,712. Adding the latter sum to the net income of the Safety Company proper the net income of the combined companies was $1,128,641. Out of this dividends amounting to $615,125 were paid on the stock of the Safety Company, leaving a surplus of $513,516.

BRITISH COLUMBIA COPPER rose to 6⅝. The stock that had been awaiting sale at 6 was absorbed yesterday, and after passing that figure the price rose easily. Arizona Consolidated was bid up to 3¼, an advance of 2 points within the past two days.

GREENE GOLD.—In addition to the 200 shares of Greene Gold reported as having sold on Thursday at 6⅝, there were sales of the same amount of stock on that day at 6⅞.

M'ADOO ASKS CITIZENS TO HELP SELECT MEN

Says Board on Police Promotions Will Guarantee Fairness.

WRITES TO REFORM LEADERS

Morris K. Jesup, Austen G. Fox, George Dyer, David McClure, and St. Clair McKelway Asked to Serve.

In making the many promotions in the Police Department, which the recent wholesale retirements have rendered necessary, Commissioner McAdoo has hit upon a novel plan which may be adopted for permanent use, should it commend itself to the Commissioner as practicable and successful. It is the establishing of a commission, made up of prominent citizens, to act in an advisory capacity in selecting the men for promotion.

Commissioner McAdoo, with this end in view, sent letters yesterday to Morris K. Jesup, Austen G. Fox, Col. George R. Dyer, David McClure, and St. Clair McKelway, asking them to assist him in choosing from the eligible lists the candidates to fill the places at present vacant.

Of the men to whom the Commissioner sent letters, nearly all have been identified with reform movements. Austen G. Fox is Chairman of the Committee of Nine. Mr. Jesup, as President of the Chamber of Commerce, was active in the formation of the Committee of Nine as well as the Committee of Fifteen, the work of which led to the defeat of Tammany after the Van Wyck administration. The Commissioner's letter was as follows:

"I am confronted with the duty, within the limitations fixed by the civil service law, of filling four vacancies in the grade of Inspector, seventeen in the grade of Captain, and forty-seven in the grade of Sergeant of Police, which is the largest number of vacancies that has existed at one time in the history of the department. It is absolutely essential, in my judgment, for the best interests of the police and the public that these promotions, so far as I am allowed discretion by law, shall be made in such a manner as to demonstrate their fairness and impartiality and that those promoted shall owe their elevation solely to merit.

"The effect on the police themselves of an impartial and unbiased selection, based on merit and fitness, will be most excellent.

"I write, therefore, to beg of you in the interests of good citizenship and the increased efficiency of this force, to ask if you will not co-operate with me as part of an advisory committee in making these selections. You will have placed before you all the evidence with regard to the men to be selected in my possession, and will be given full and extended opportunity, without reserve, to examine into the character and fitness of the candidates.

"As the eligible lists for some of the grades are very small or practically exhausted, I have ordered new lists made by the Civil Service Commission, and, in the interim, it is my intention, in most of the cases, at least, to appoint acting officers from the lower to the higher grades, thus giving them an opportunity, as it were, of proving themselves. I would expect the committee, in making these assignments, to advise me in the final promotion from the eligible list, which will then be before the department.

"I know of no service that you can render to the city of New York higher than this, which may mark a new era in police administration, I do not think that the time required of you will be so extensive as to interfere seriously with your business or other engagements.

"I am asking, in this connection, the following gentlemen to join you on this committee: Col. George R. Dyer, Austen G. Fox, David McClure, Morris K. Jesup, and St. Clair McKelway.

"In the end the selections, of course, by law, rest with me, and you need have no fear that I will seek to evade the full responsibility. In addition to yourself and the other members above named, Mr. Howell will act as Secretary. Chief Inspector Cortright will be one of the committee."

PENNSYLVANIA'S PLAN FOR SUBWAY REJECTED

Board Decides Upon Independent Line for 34th Street.

MAY BE MOVING PLATFORM

Bids to be Asked on Lexington, Third, Seventh, and Eighth Avenue Routes.

Thirty-fourth Street will have an independent cross-town subway, operating either trains or a moving platform, and will not be a part of any trunk line system, as was desired by the Metropolitan interests, with the backing of the Pennsylvania and New Haven Roads. This definitely was determined by the Rapid Transit Commission at yesterday's meeting, when formal assent was given to the resolutions laying out the Lexington, Third, Seventh, and Eighth Avenue lines for competitive bidding.

The decision of the board in relation to Thirty-fourth Street was due largely to the opinion on the part of its engineers that a four-track subway, such as the Metropolitan people proposed, could not safely be brought over Thirty-fourth Street from Lexington Avenue and turned into Fifth Avenue because of the wide turn which would have to be made at Thirty-fourth Street and Fifth Avenue, where stand the Waldorf-Astoria and the Knickerbocker Trust Company building, and where also the new Altman store soon will be erected.

The structures are so massive and their sub-structures so deep that it was regarded as impracticable and unnecessarily expensive to make a turn at such a point. Therefore the board decided to have two tracks of the Lexington Avenue line tunnel into Thirty-fifth Street from Lexington to Fifth Avenue, and to place the other two tracks under Thirty-sixth Street. Thus provision will have to be made for only two instead of four tracks at each of the turns.

When the resolution is presented next week it will divide the Thirty-fourth Street work into sections, one extending from East River to Ninth Avenue and the other from Ninth Avenue to North River. This last section is to be offered merely in the event of any bidder desiring to construct from river to river, but no one has signified any intention of bidding for any subway west of Ninth Avenue.

KILL SECOND AVENUE PLAN.

In addition to settling these routes the board put the four-tracking of the Second Avenue elevated line to a vote and killed it, all of the members voting adversely except Commissioner Claflin, who did not vote. The board also authorized the Interborough Company to construct its Van Cortlandt Park extension to the existing Subway, this extension to run on a viaduct or elevated structure from Two Hundred and Thirty-third Street to Two Hundred and Eighty-eighth Street, and so furnish access not only to Van Cortlandt Park, but also to the yards which the Interborough is to construct at Two Hundred and Fiftieth to Two Hundred and Sixtieth Street.

When the board met yesterday a communication was read from the Continuous Transit Securities Company, with Max E. Schmidt; Stuyvesant Fish, and Cornelius Vanderbilt as a committee, in favor of allowing them to bid for the Thirty-fourth Street subway work for their moving platform plan. It then became known that the determination of the board to bar the moving platform people had been abandoned, and that the moving platform promoters and bidders for train subway construction would be permitted to compete for this route. In a second communication from the moving platform promoters it was said that Mr. Belmont, as President of the Interborough, wished to have a moving platform installed on the Forty-second Street spur of the Manhattanville elevated road. In this communication appears the following paragraph:

"We expect to take immediate steps to comply with Mr. Belmont's terms and to install a moving platform in the place suggested. As this will only be a matter of a few months, and before any possible contract for the Thirty-fourth Street subway can be awarded, we again urge your board to consider our request that a decision as to the method of operation be withheld until such contracts are awarded."

MR. BELMONT ASKS DELAY.

A letter was read from August Belmont urging that no action be taken on the adoption of routes for another week or two, in order that his engineers might have opportunity to go over them in detail and make any presentation which the Interborough people might deem advisable. William Barclay Parsons, for the Interborough, said that the routes had not come before him until the day before. Controller Grout objected to delay, saying that the routes had been decided upon and that now the board only had to give formal assent to the wordings of the resolutions. He also said that it was advisable to hasten things so that the Board of Aldermen could act on the routes, if possible, before Gov. Higgins signed the bills preventing them from acting on franchises. This would prevent any question of the constitutionality of the bills arising over transit matters.

On the proposition of four tracking the Fourth Street (Brooklyn) subway route, a letter was read from August Belmont stipulating that the Interborough Rapid Transit Company was willing to pay half the cost of the four tracking as the board proposed, but that the city should pay the cost of the connection. The proposition as made by the company was passed. It provides that the city shall pay $1,500,000 and the company $500,000.

AMSTERDAM AVENUE STAY.

Court Orders New Trial in Action to Compel Removal of Tracks.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court to-day handed down a decision reversing the judgment of the Special Term, and ordering a new trial in the case of the Forty-second Street, Manhattanville and St. Nicholas Avenue Railroad Company against Jacob A. Cantor, as President of the Borough of Manhattan, and others. The plaintiff sought to prevent the removal of its tracks from Amsterdam Avenue, and the action was dismissed by the Special Term.

Justice Patterson, writing the opinion of the court, says:

"We think that the proof was inadequate to show an abandonment by the plaintiff of the tracks. The effect of denying it relief is to deprive it of the benefit of its franchise, and very much stronger evidence should be required to effect that object than that which appears now before us—even if the court had power in such an action as this so to [illegible]

NO AID FOR MOLINEUX JUROR.

Mayor Vetoes This Bill and Eight Others—Man an Invalid Since Trial.

Mayor McClellan yesterday vetoed nine more legislative measures, after holding hearings on them. Among them was the bill to provide compensation for Manheim Brown, the Molineux juror, who contracted a cold at the trial and has been an invalid ever since. The Mayor, in his veto, says that if Mr. Brown has any good claim for damages the State Court of Claims provides the remedy.

Another bill disapproved was the measure to permit the Police Commissioner to reopen the case of ex-Policeman McGee, known as "Suspender Jack," and reinstate him if in his judgment the man was unfairly treated. The Mayor says the courts have already disposed of the case.

The bill which sought to restore to the department nineteen men who were appointed without examination, in an emergency, to the Fire Department of Brooklyn and then dropped, and the bill for the relief of Elizabeth McGovern and several other teachers, who left the department of education before the establishment of a pension fund, and now want to be included on the pension roll, were also disapproved.

BURBANK WILL STANDS.

Estate Not to Await Recovery of Insane Nephew.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court yesterday affirmed the decree of Surrogate Fitzgerald admitting to probate the will of Ambrose B. Burbank, who died in January, 1904, at the age of ninety-three. By a will dated March 29, 1899, he disposed of $200,000 in specific legacies, and left the residue to his nephew, Caleb R. Burbank. Nearly a dozen relatives contested the probate, and Mrs. E. B. Newcomb, wife of one of the nephews, testified that she had seen a will made in December, 1899. It was also alleged that a third will had been made in 1897.

Mr. Burbank's papers after his death came into the possession of Caleb A. Burbank and another nephew, Samuel Burbank. Samuel Burbank attempted to commit suicide in June, 1904, and was afterward sent to a sanitarium as insane. The contestants alleged that Samuel had been a party to the [illegible] two later wills, but Surrogate Fitzgerald refused to adjourn the probate proceedings until his testimony could be obtained. The Appellate Division holds that he was right in this refusal, as there was no prospect that Samuel Burbank would recover his reason.

FORBIDS SALE OF WATER.

Gov. Stokes Signs Jersey Bill While Board of Estimate Deliberates.

While the Board of Estimate and Apportionment was discussing yesterday the proposed contract by which the city was to purchase water for Staten Island from a New Jersey company, Gov. Stokes of New Jersey signed the bill making illegal the sale of New Jersey potable water to the State of New York or any of its sub-divisions. Property owners along the Passaic River declared that if the sale was allowed the river would be reduced to a small creek at points where it now is essential to manufacturing.

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

IN the opinion of The London Academy, officially expressed by its editor, "William Cullen Bryan" is not entitled to "a place beside Homer, Shakespeare, Milton, and Dante." The editor does not refer to Mr. William Jennings Bryan, who has never claimed a place in that galley, but to the author of "Lines to a Water-fowl" and "The melancholy days have come," and in thus slightingly omitting the ultimate "t" of the poet's family name this English critic, of course, makes doubly effective the sting of his rebuke to Americans who fancy their country has produced a few good poets. The ire of the editor of The Academy is stirred up by an article or "symposium" in our contemporary The Critic, in regard to a recent "slump in poetry." The editor is moved to ask "why the cry should have been raised in America." Have Americans produced any poetry worth mentioning? Certainly not, and Poe, Longfellow, and the aforesaid "William Cullen Bryan" are not worthy to be mentioned in the same breath with the aforesaid Homer, as, doubtless, many prosperous contemporary English versifiers, known to the editor of The Academy, are. Moreover, this editor exclaims, "Who are Woodberry, Moody, and Edith Thomas, who is Riley, who is Markham?" Well, they are humble persons who write agreeable verse, and we are inclined to think that the editor of The Academy knows all about them, or just as much about them as American readers of contemporary verse know of Robert Bridges, William Watson, John Davidson, Alice Meynell, and Owen Seaman--all of whom, by the way, we account most agreeable writers of verse.

The one hundredth anniversary of Schiller's death has been celebrated with joyous manifestations which would have been more in accord, it seems, with a celebration of the centenary of his birth. This only proves, however, that the occasion of such a celebration does not count for much. The object of Germans the world over, and of much of the rest of mankind in sympathy with them, was to honor the memory of a great national poet whose influence was world-wide, and it made little difference that the one hundredth anniversary in May of his death was the day selected this year rather than the one hundred and forty-sixth anniversary, next November, of his birth. Presumably the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of that event, so glorious in the history of German letters, will not pass unnoticed four years hence. An interesting feature of the Schiller celebration is the exhibition of portraits of the poet, pictures of his birthplace and home, and some rare Schiller autographs, in the lower hall of the Lenox Library Building on Fifth Avenue. This will be transferred in June to the Astor Library.

Mary Moss, writing in The Atlantic Monthly, avows that she has "lately" read sixty English and American novels, fresh from the press, and kept memoranda of her impressions. In American fiction she finds a "recognizable Western school," though Mr. Owen Wister, treating of "cowboys and biscuit-shooters," frankly from the point of view of an impressionable outsider, "no more belongs in the West than Mr. Thompson-Seton in a menagerie." But there is much contemporary fiction bearing the Western hall-mark that is written by Easterners in the East. No such vital influence is now working in English fiction as that exerted by the literary young Westerners in this country.

A novel of the hour that will be widely read and much discussed is "Jörn Uhl," translated from Gustav Frenssen by F. S. Delmer. Its passage descriptive of the battle of Gravelotte has already been praised by critics far and wide as fit to rank with the battle pictures of Victor Hugo. One English reviewer calls it "the most perfect example of artistic impressionism we remember to have read in any work of modern times." The story treats of the simple life and commonplace struggles of a peasant-born hero, told without much regard for form, but full of true (not idealized) humanity and the feeling for the beautiful in inanimate nature. Frenssen, its author, a native of a village in Schleswig-Holstein, wrote two novels before this which attracted little attention. But this has made him famous.

When paradox meets paradox then comes the tug of war. For The London Daily Chronicle Gilbert K. Chesterton reviews James Huneker's book on the modern or recent European dramatists called "Iconoclasts," to which we have lately referred with a note of admiration. He objects to the title because it is uncomplimentary. "In the whole range of human occupations," exclaims this amiable idol-smasher, "is it possible to imagine a poorer thing to be than an iconoclast? It is the lowest of all the unskilled trades." On the whole, however, Mr. Chesterton likes Mr. Huneker's book, as might have been expected, but he finds it infected with the "loose modernism of the association of the idea of art with the idea of mere liberty and contempt of limitations." In the mood in which Mr. Chesterton wrote he believed in the limitations of art and the righteousness of social conventions. That is why he deprecates Bernard Shaw's private and personal contempt for his own Candida, which Huneker reveals in this book. "Candida" represents to Mr. Chesterton (in this mood) "a most severe and manly piece of moral truth."

LORD SALISBURY.

Interest in a Remarkable Man Reawakened by the Publication in Book Form of Some of His Early Essays in The Quarterly Review.*

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW by MONTGOMERY SCHUYLER.

SINCE the British publication of these volumes, The London Saturday Review has observed of them, with equal accuracy and ingratitude, that if they appeared now for the first time as the work of an unknown writer they would attract no attention, or words to that effect. Of course with accuracy, seeing that the six articles, (really only five--two of them being a review subdivided for the convenience of the "Quarterly,") deal with topics which by very dint of their "actuality" in 1861-8, when they were published, have now become topics to be dealt with, if at all, no longer in a "journalistic," but in a historically retrospective and perspective view. With ingratitude, because Lord Salisbury was one of the writers who gave The Saturday Review that strength which in old days moved the British earth and heaven, in the shape of an authority which, in the days of the present vilipender of one of them, it has come to be without. All the same, one is bound to accept the Bunsbyan conclusion, and to admit that if these essays were now to be reproduced as the work of a man who had done nothing else, they would not command attention. In other words, the interest which attracts readers to them is the interest in the man otherwise so remarkable who wrote them at a time when, as Lord Robert Cecil, and as a private member of Parliament at odds with his noble parent, he found it necessary to do something for his living, and found writing for it the readiest means, succeeding so well that, according to Bagehot's words, written after he came to his marquisate, he was the only member of his order who had both succeeded to it by inheritance and had shown the ability to earn his living.

It does not at all follow that because the attraction of the reader to the essays is biographical and extrinsic, they will not repay it by their intrinsic interest. That one of their readers has found them to do so is the occasion of these remarks. They are all characteristic, naturally, of the position to which the author was committed by birth, and the Tory organ in which he wrote by its reason of being. There were gigantic articles in those days, as there still are in such of the quarterly race as survive the monthly and hebdomadal competition, and appeal to "the careless and interrupted listening of these tumultuous times," and Lord Robert's articles seem even excessive in length, judged by the standard of their own kind, averaging apparently, for example, several thousand words more than Macaulay's. In the twentieth century, each one of them would be esteemed worthy of going between covers by itself as a booklet. That they are partisan goes without saying. There is no more ferocious polemic than your British publicist unless it be your Scottish theologian, whom mankind no longer reads, and the anonymous contributor to The Quarterly was distinctly of the race who, as Emerson put it, converted the histories of Greece and Rome into English party pamphlets. Although the essays are divided by the present editor into those of biography and those of "foreign politics," they are all really political and all really polemical. When Johnson was complimented upon the impartiality of his supposititious reports of speeches in Parliament, he made answer: "I saved appearances tolerably well; but I took care that the Whig dogs should not have the best of it." Lord Robert Cecil, it seems sometimes to his readers, might have said the same thing with the omission of the saving clause. And the partisanship is the more remarkable that the reader of another country and another generation finds it difficult to name any really important issue, after the French Revolution and the first Reform bill, upon which Whigs and Tories divided, while the Reform bill had been for a generation an accomplished fact before these essays were written. Electoral reform was, to be sure, still an issue, although, after the great concession of 1832, it might well have appeared that the rate at which the remaining steps toward universal suffrage were to be taken was no great matter. In fact, however, the Gladstone bill for the extension of the suffrage was to come in 1866 and to on the occasion of the most bitter and startling debate which the South of Commons had witnessed in the lifetime of those who took part in it, while Disraeli was to take the suffrage finally out of politics the following year by the same device of which he had accused Sir Robert Peel, the device of "catching the Whigs bathing and stealing their clothes."

Of course there was no question about how a Cecil, whether heir apparent or not even heir presumptive to the marquisate, would stand on either of these questions, either upon the historical question of the French Revolution, or upon the present political question of the extension of the electorate. Both were "leveling measures," and it was against leveling artificial distinctions among men that the essayist was committed by the fact of his birth. He is natally and prenatally opposed to the way the world is going. His idea of Government is, we will not quite say the beautiful state of things that now exists in Russia, nor yet the state of things which existed in the seventeenth century in England, whereby, according to one vehement radical of the times, certain men come into the world with boots and spurs to ride, and a much larger number with saddles and bridles to be ridden. But it is that of the England of the eighteenth century, in which a bold peasantry, their country's pride, ordered themselves, in the highly characteristical language of the Anglican catechism, "lowly and reverently to all their betters." Under the patriarchal scheme of things, the consent of the governed is not so much denied as taken for granted, the natural rulers of the people receiving carte blanche in advance from the masses to govern them not after their own crude notions, but according to the superior counsel of their "betters." It is the same ideal which certain old-fashioned Southerners in this country from time to time present to us as the solution of the negro question. Of course it is understood, in either case, that the refractory catechumen, if it be Hodge, or the "insolent negro," if it be the Southern Afro-American, who insists upon "wanting to know, you know," is to be frowned down and discouraged.

This aristocratic ideal is a very comfortable ideal for the class in possession. What Colonel Bungstarter and the Marquis of Salisbury have in common is their attachment to it. And the sympathy of the British "landed aristocracy" with the landed aristocracy of the South, albeit or even because this latter was founded on subordination to the extent of slavery, was doubtless, in addition to the desire to see the American Union broken up, at the root of the sympathy of the British ruling classes with the Confederacy as against the Union during our civil war. This sympathy Anthony Trollope, an entirely credible witness on such a point, makes one of his High Church characters express at a dinner party, "the Archdeacon professing an opinion that the Southerners were Christian gentlemen, and the Northerners infidel snobs." But such a scheme of politics and of human society is so entirely against the way the world is going that what is singular and remarkable is to find it professed by the man of whom Walter Bagehot explained, when the man was Viscount Cranbourne, and by the exigencies of British politics Secretary of State for India, though he had never paid any particular attention to Indian affairs—"he can get them up, because he is an able, educated man, who can get up anything," a man who had shown himself capable of earning his own living in the open market of anonymous political writing, where nothing counts but the power to interest on your merits, a modern man, who even knew about chemistry. To find such a modern man holding such obsolete opinions is the same sort of anachronism that strikes us when we find the Japanese Generals, more Occidental than the Westerners in the practical application to war of the latest mechanical appliances, and who, as we are given to understand, beguile their leisure with Spencer and Darwin and Huxley and Helmholtz, yet assisting at some kind of mass for the repose of the souls of Japanese soldiers and sailors killed in action. To account for Lord Robert Cecil's political position, or even for that of the Marquis of Salisbury whom he became, and who, at the time of his death, was described as the typical aristocrat in British politics, we have tion of murder, or massacre of the institutions the British Empire rests on, still almost as potent garrison of the law as they ever were by reason of their powers within the law, which they made it, and of them the chafing Briton may still exclaim:

The dead but sceptred sovereigns who still rule
Our spirits from their urns.

In these essays the faith of their author in the old patriarchal, or aristocratical, theory of British Government is for the most part implicit, and to be taken along by the reader as a constant guide to his specific opinions and expressions. Occasionally it becomes explicit, as in this passage from the essay on "Poland":

It is a striking testimony to the value which the world places upon a traditional title, that men who have achieved a great success by their own courage or ability are scarcely ever satisfied to rest it on such a ground. They almost always press History into their service and torture her into proving that the Power they are setting up is either the revival of some buried right, or the copy of some ancient model. Napoleon used to scoff at this weakness, and to boast that his first patent of nobility was dated from Montebello. But when he came to establish a dynasty he did not think himself secure against the associations that hung around the exiled Bourbons unless he could surround himself with associations more venerable still.

It does not matter that Napoleon's abdication of his position as "the armed soldier of democracy" for that of an adopted scion of the old régime was one of the causes of his weakness and his fall. What Lord Salisbury has in mind is the case of a parvenu, say a successful stock broker, or American millionaire, who might acquire the next estate to Hatfield, and endeavor to strengthen his position with a fabricated pedigree hooking him on to a Crusader, such as is alleged to have been manufactured for the social uses of our esteemed ex-countryman, Mr. W. W. Astor. The unquestionable moral is that, at least in England, a Marquis is still a Marquis.

But to reconstruct history from that personal point of view is a perilous enterprise. Not that Lord Robert Cecil had any notion of reconstructing history or of doing anything but earning a fairly honest living by writing in London, as Samuel Johnson had done, a century and more before. But the implicit view of the next heir but one or but two colored his views of life as the implicit views of the son of a bookpeddler whom it were flattery to call a bookseller had colored his. Heredity and environment are two facts from the combined effects of which nobody can escape. And perhaps one is justified in becoming gradually weary of the point of view of a banished Duke in Bohemia, who still retains orthodox ducal sentiments. Assuming him to be an "able, educated man," one might expect his remarks to be rather deeply tinged with cynicism. And one quite finds that to be the case with these writings. They are all, one may say, colored by the point of view for which the author has never felt himself bound to account, simply because he was born to take it. The essay on "Lord Castlereagh," formally a rehabilitation, and a most skillful rehabilitation, of a statesman discredited by the sarcasm of two generations, is essentially a disparagement of "modern," which is to say "Whig," which in turn is to say "liberal," political ideals. Not one of them escapes the censure of this superior young writer. But first we must extract from this same article a passage significant as showing the placid faith of the young writer that he would arrive at the point of being responsible for the foreign policy of Great Britain, and as showing also what we may call the traditional and hereditary ability of a young man who had never held such an office to take the high official point of view:

His enemies had many things to avenge which political partisans are slow to forgive. He had not only excluded them for many years from power, but he had succeeded in spite of the prophecies of evil with which they had pursued his policy. He had attained the object which they had declared impracticable, and carried through to a glorious triumph the measures which they had stigmatised as imbecile. Forced to admit the success of his policy, they were forced to avenge themselves upon his motives. Against criticism of this kind a statesman who has the foreign policy of an empire to conduct is almost defenseless. The obscurity in which diplomatic transactions are necessarily shrouded will probably conceal from and of history, the faults A's follies of men whom it would be injurious to English interests to offend often forces [illegible] the silent whose silence is interpreted by his enemies as confession. Lord Castlereagh was not the man to jeopardise the meanest English interest for the sake of refuting some calumniator of his own good name. The tyranny of the Eastern Autocrats, and the assumptions of the Holy Alliance had aroused an abundance of bitter and resentful feeling among educated Englishmen. It was easy to persuade men that the Minister who always, as became his office, spoke in public with courtesy of the allies of England, shared their maxims of government, and acquiesced in their policy to secondary States. Thus the belief that Lord Castlereagh was the arch enemy of freedom all over the world was widely spread, and came to be almost an article of faith with the school of writers and public men who prepared the English soil for the Reform bill and reaped its earliest fruits.

One can imagine, nay, one can almost recall, Lord Salisbury as Foreign Minister in the House of Lords, a generation after these words were putting forward these same considerations which he adduces in the defense of Lord Castlereagh, as explanations why he could not explain some questionable passage in his own foreign policy. It has been admitted, even by Liberal British critics, that aristocratic government is apt to have a dignity and a steadiness and continuity in foreign affairs which a democratic Government is likely to lack, and such an exposition as that we have just cited tends to explain the admission.

One thing these essays have in common, and that is a disbelief in the people. Nothing so delights the noble author as to find the multitude, the populace, making a fool of itself, and he is always looking for such occasions. Of course that is in the part. A popular delusion is his favorite quarry, and he naturally labors to show that every popular enthusiasm is a popular delusion. We are continually coming, in these essays, upon passages which prefigure the stern joy with which their author thirty years afterward, and as Prime Minister, found himself in a position to notify the French Government of the day the British refused to take official part in the Paris Exposition of 1889, upon the ground that Her Majesty's Government was not by any means clear that the taking of the Bastille was an achievement worthy of historical celebration. "So hot, my little man," is what it always pleases him to be able to say of the condition of the British mind under the calorific effect of "burning questions." At the beginning of the essay on "Poland" he makes explicit profession of this point of view:

There are few positions more embarrassing than that of men who hold moderate opinions in regard to questions upon which excitement is running high. They are regarded by each side as combining the demerits of an antagonist and of a deserter. The pursuer of the golden mean must be content with the intrinsic value of the intermediate course which he selects. He will win no human sympathy and must submit to be cast out as crotchety by every enthusiastic mind. An enemy is more tolerable than a friend who advances to your aid encased in a panoply of "ifs" and "buts." It is still more irritating when the lukewarmness of your ally takes the form of historical precision. Nothing can be more aggravating to them, at the moment when men are nerving themselves for a death grapple with an overwhelming foe than to have their bravery subjected to a pedantic literary criticism and pared down to the standard of a set of pettifogging facts.

This is prefatory to an interesting and well fortified pooh-poohing of the historical wrongs of Poland, and to an attenuation to a pale pink of "the bloodiest picture in the Book of Time." "It involved no breach of treaty so flagrant as the seizure of Silesia; it was accompanied by no deception so shameless as that treaty by which Clive made England the mistress of Bengal." And, in this essay, as also in that on Lord Castlereagh, what the essayist describes as "the modern doctrine of nationality" is elaborately disparaged. We are told of Lord Castlereagh:

The idea seems scarcely to have dawned upon him that any one had laid it down as a political dogma that no two peoples speaking different languages ought to be under the same Government, and that any amount of revolutionary confusion was preferable to such an enormity. * * * There is no doubt that to the philological law of nations he was obstinately deaf, whether he perfectly understood it or not, and that if he had understood it better he would have disliked it more. The poetical or literary law of nations met

By his conduct in the Greek question he evidently did not assent to the modern theory that the territorial [illegible] of a nation ought to be settled according to its literary history. He never understood why the fact that Aeschylus had written in Attica, and Pindar had celebrated the games of the Morea, some five and twenty centuries ago, furnished in itself any reason for changing the Government under which Attica and the Morea happened at the moment to be. Possibly he would have been equally impenetrable to the argument that because Dante was a citizen of Florence, or Virgil composed poetry in Rome, therefore a German ought not to reign in Venice.

The article on "The Danish Duchies" is an apparent exception to the rule of decrying aspirations to nationality. Here we find something like sympathy expressed for the people of the Danish Duchies who were then in danger of the fate which has since befallen them of falling under the Prussian yoke. But one finds that in this particular instance it happened that the author disliked Prussia as represented by Bismarck in the Frankfort Diet, and also that he saw his way to a telling political point against the "Whigs," as represented by Lord John Russell and Lord Palmerston, who happened to be in power. The point against them, made again in the article on "Foreign Politics," is not only telling, but fair, since there is no doubt that England's desertion of Denmark, after encouraging Denmark to count on her assistance, was a disreputable transaction. The Prussian "junker" the essayist seems to resent as a kind of pinchbeck imitation of the British nobleman. The exposure of Bismarck, in particular, though he is never named except once in a footnote, is so unsparing that if the "Iron Chancellor" read the exposure and traced it to its author, his rather clumsy sarcasm upon the author fifteen years later, at the Berlin Conference, as "a man of lath painted to look like iron," is entirely explained. The essay is by far the most interesting account accessible of the "Schleswig-Holstein question," an unraveling of the tangled skein which bewildered so many in its day, and it is animated by an extreme dislike for Prussia, extending even to "the sublime and divine German language" which "is being blasphemously excluded from the village pulpits and parish schools" in Schleswig, where the inhabitants preferred to speak Danish. The essay is perhaps the most valuable and interesting in a volume in which everything is interesting excepting the review of "Foreign Politics," of which the interest was journalistic and is past. If it have a rival, it is the review of Stanhope's Life of Pitt, avowedly a counterblast to Lord Macaulay's biography in the "Brittanica," and to Lord John Russell's edition of Fox's correspondence. It is very instructive to read this review after re-reading the biography. It is quite as readable as Macaulay's sketch and far more credible in the explanation it gives of Pitt's political victory over Fox by ascribing it not to his "eloquence," but to his character:

There is no blindness so unaccountable as the blindness of English statesmen to the political value of a character. Living only in and for the House of Commons, moving in an atmosphere of constant intrigue, accustomed to look upon oratory as a mode of angling for political support and upon political professions as only baits of more or less attractiveness, they acquire a very peculiar code of ethics, and they are liable wholly to lose sight of the fact that there is a stiffer and less corrupted mortality out of doors. They not only come to forget what is right, but they forget that there is any one who knows it. * * * And thus we have had the spectacle, even in later days, of party leaders of considerable intellect laboriously and carefully ruining themselves in the esteem of the nation and heaping blunder upon blunder from which the meanest of their followers would have been competent to warn them. They have failed because they have been blind to the elementary truth that a character for unselfish honesty is the only secure passport to the confidence of the English people.

Which is all very well, but the whole purport of these essays is that the confidence which "the English people" came to show Lord Salisbury was never really reciprocated, except to a select section of them. All through these volumes distrust of "the people" is writ large. Of the dispositions made by the Congress of Vienna, in the article on Lord Castlereagh, it is said: "It was impossible for any statesman to consult the wishes of the peoples, for the simple reason that the peoples had no enduring and settled wishes to consult." Burke could not draw against a nation the indictment which Lord Salisbury found no difficulty in drawing against all Europe. It follows that a Government founded upon not merely the consent of the governed, but upon their assumed capacity to govern themselves, was the object of the particular animosity of the noble writer. If the United States of America were all right, then obviously he was all wrong. We were in trouble in those years (1861-4) during which these essays were written and published, and our troubles were necessarily his satisfactions. We are never mentioned in these volumes except with a sneer, and to point a moral at our expense. What else could be expected of a "people," a populace, who do not know their catechism nor acknowledge their "betters"? We are, in fact, the terror of his tribe. He does his tribe an injustice when he says: "The universal sympathy that has responded to the appeal of the Poles will forbid the statesmen of England to watch the drama that is being played out upon the Vistula with the same lazy disregard with which they have studied the disintegration of their old rival in the West." "Lazy disregard" may have been the feeling with which Lord John Russell received the expostulations of Mr. Adams about the building of the Alabama, but it is by no means the feeling with which an aristocratic statesman watches the success or failure of an effort to overthrow all his political theories. It was the keen satisfaction of a prophet whose prophecy is in course of fulfillment with which the Confederate successes of the first years of the war were watched in England. "That kind of freedom which is conferred by universal suffrage, and which is flourishing in such fascinating beauty in the State of Maryland just now," is his recognition of the necessity the Government at Washington found itself under of garrisoning Baltimore. And of the arbitrary arrests at the North, undoubtedly a blot, and, or because, a useless blot on the history of Lincoln's Administration, we find it said: "This is the pattern method of dealing with conspirators that has been set up for the admiration of the world by the model Republic." Really, it is a bouquet of flowers. But we can afford to look at and inhale these blighted blossoms better than could the gatherer of the nosegay, if he had survived to see this day, as he did survive long enough to give mortal offense to Spain, in 1898, by his reference to us as a living and to her as a dying nation.

Very well worth reading on many accounts these essays are. But perhaps most of all as showing how a highly cultivated modern man and acute dialectition may still represent and embody an antiquated theory of politics. Dukes and squires there doubtless are and will remain who continue inarticulately to cherish Lord Salisbury's political ideals. But it seems a safe prophecy that nobody who is able to express them so skillfully will much longer continue to profess them at all, and in particular that nobody who professes them will ever again come to be Prime Minister of Great Britain. In the Great Southwest.

THE HUMAN TOUCH. A Tale of the Great Southwest. By Edith M. Nicholl. Illustrated. 12mo. Boston: The Lothrop Publishing Company. $1.50.

This is a story of love, of sacrifice, of cattle ranching, and of heroics of all kinds. David Kingdon, a young man of rare personal attractions, had married, before the story opens, Clairette, a young woman with whom he later proved to be sadly mismated. Clairette as time passed spent less and less time with her husband and more and more in her native city of Jonesville, or traveling on the Continent. It was during one of her Continental tours that David visited New York and met Sylvia Newman. Sylvia was no ordinary young woman. She was beautiful with a beauty that "did not appeal to the masses." She possessed "a charming rippling mouth, a firm, little chin," a forehead of dazzling whiteness, and a "shining gold-dusted mass" of hair. Even before David had a right to love Sylvia that "human touch" which binds soul to soul had already gripped them. Therefore when the providential news of Clairette's death by shipwreck reached the bereaved husband he hastened to Sylvia and together they fled to Kansas City to be wed.

On his cattle ranch in the great Southwest David and Sylvia found idyllic peace until one day the late Clairette unpleasantly home again, not having been drowned at all, and Sylvia's sacrifices began.

It is a strong [illegible] that Heath at tion and heartbreaking partings on the part of Sylvia and David, of rank selfishness and indifference on the part of Clairette; cattle feuds of deadly ending, train robberies, treachery, and kidnapping. Sylvia, city bred and of delicate rearing, gallops back and forth along the trail, bullets whizzing through the air, her own six-shooter poised coolly in her hand. There are dark, unfrequented caves wherein the enemy hides and which it is left for Sylvia to discover. There is a scene by night where David, wounded by the enemy, might have died where he lay but for Sylvia's swift rescue; in fact, it is a story of unusual excitement, and will hold the reader enthralled just so far as his taste may run in this kind of shotgun literature.

And after the storm and stress of things subsides Clairette herself gallantly comes to the rescue of the suffering David and Sylvia by taking up her residence for a while in South Dakota, and thus leaves the way clear for the long-suffering lovers to at last become reunited.

W. J. Locke's Brilliant Book.

THE MORALS OF MARCUS ORDEYNE. By William J. Locke. Cloth, 12mo. Pp. 302. New York: John Lane. $1.50.

Concerning "The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne" one is tempted to paraphrase the famous chapter on Snakes in Ireland. Mr. Locke has written a brilliant book, one that commands the reader's interest, but the protagonist is sadly to seek in the things that give dignity to manhood.

It has been said—and, to a certain extent, truly said—that to discover flaws in the character of a novel is not part of the function of criticism; the sole question is, How does the author handle these characters? It seems to us, however, that this depends upon the author's own attitude toward his creations. If he presents them with absolute aloofness we have only to inquire whether they are true to life. If he engages our sympathies for vice or weakness, if he commits high treason against goodness by making it unlovely, then we reserve the right of protest.

Both these things Mr. Locke has done in his latest novel. The three characters for whom, while under the writer's spell, our admiration is compelled, are Ordeyne, Judith, and Carlotta, all of whom have "thrown the Sacred Cup of Good Repute over the windmills." Ordeyne, for years a tutor, brings but one friendship out of his association with youth, that of an "inconsequent libertine" devoid of conscience and of honor, with the single redeeming quality of impulsive kindness. Ordeyne himself has a connection with a woman of mind and feeling who, however, never wakens the deep passion which possesses him when his life is invaded by an example of the most perfectly fleshly feminine ever portrayed—the eighteen-year-old Carlotta, reared in a harem, a kitten's temperament in a beautiful woman's form—without intellect, or with intellect asleep, as soulless as Undine, loving luxury and petting, but giving nothing in return, devoid of human feeling for sorrow and pain. Sin and shame do not exist for her, and although the author assures us, almost on the last page, of the tardy birth of her soul, the animal Carlotta is the heroine of the book. Judith, refined, spirituelle, clever, charming, had been lured from her first husband, "thus breaking his heart, poor man, so that he died soon after"; had married her seducer, who "deserted her for a barmaid," and is introduced at the age of thirty-six, having held for eight years an anomalous relation to Marcus Ordeyne. Such are the characters who carry us along with them. On the other hand, the respectable aunts and cousins are so painted as to evoke contempt, while the "converted" Mainwaring is simply nauseous. From all the characters the capability of repentance seems to be absent. Mr. Locke represents his hero as engaged upon a "History of Renaissance Morals," and, truly, his "quaint passion for the cinque-cento Italian" seems to have resulted, both in himself and in his chosen friends, in a sort of cinque-cento recrudescence. Ordeyne's chosen field of research is one of Mr. Locke's many whimsical and witty touches.

The story is told in the form of a diary, with all the author's well-known power and distinction. It is entirely original in conception, and the plot is carried out with great skill. The conversations are particularly clever. It is one of the few present-day novels which, once begun, it is impossible to lay aside. Ordeyne's tenderness for the beautiful feminine, "et præterea nihil," that he loves so blindly and absurdly, is very touching. It is the love that both gives and forgives everything, demanding no return. Such, after all, goodness, just plain goodness, is the difficult and heroic thing in life, and we are sorry to see Mr. Locke's brilliant pen descending from the heights of "Where Love Is" to lower levels of moral miasma and mirage. The passages of fine feeling, the emotion that rings true in "The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne," even the partial atonements of the close, do not efface the general impression that the pure life is the limited life, that genial virtues blossom best alongside "the primrose path of dalliance." Whatever Mr. Locke does is done so well that it behooves him more than the general to see to it that it is well worth the doing.

BOOKS ON MUSIC.

Dent's "Scarlatti," Newman's "Wagner," Markham Lee's "Tschaikowski," D. G. Mason's "Beethoven and His Forerunners," and Other Works.*

RICHARD ALDRICH.

I.

MR. DENT, in his "Alessandro Scarlatti," has made an exhaustive study at first hand from original documents and scores, of a composer whose importance in the history of opera has been universally recognised but singularly neglected by the historical students. This neglect Mr. Dent explains by the fact that the modern period of careful research such as has been made into the lives of Bach, Handel, Mozart, and Beethoven was marked by a decided reaction against the Italian music. There has been no authoritative study of Scarlatti till Mr. Dent undertook it, in the libraries of Italy, where most of the manuscripts of his works are preserved. It is an important original contribution to the history of music in the seventeenth century, when the history of music is chiefly the history of opera riotously developing from the seed planted by the Florentine reformers in 1600.

It was the age of the baroque in architecture, and Mr. Dent makes a suggestive comparison between that architecture, expressive of the pomps and vanities of its own time, and the social life, literature, and music of the period. In them the true moving spirit of the baroque is to be found, and for us the opera sums up in brief all the most typical features of that spirit. Venice possessed seventeen opera houses. Bologna was insanely devoted to music, and Dukes of Modena and Doges of Venice quarreled openly over the affections of prima donnas. Music was the chief factor in the life of Italy, and the seventeenth century witnessed technical progress and gain in structural development, culminating in the classical school of the early eighteenth century, wherein the foundations of the sonata and the symphony, and hence of the work of Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven, were laid. Alessandro Scarlatti, who flourished in the latter half of that and the first quarter of the next century, did most to carry-ing on that development. How he did it, and the nature of his contributions to it, Mr. Dent has undertaken to show.

Scarlatti's earlier works were those chamber cantatas that had an immense popularity not easy for us to understand—a form of long-winded recitative and arias with instrumental accompaniment, on all sorts of subjects; of which Scarlatti left as many as 500. They were frequently narratives or dramatic monologues put into the mouth of some classical personage. But an early success with an opera, "Gli Equivoci nel Sembiante," brought him into popularity and turned his attention to the form of composition most popular and most influential in Italy. Mr. Dent gives some amusing pictures of what opera meant at that period and how little it had in common with modern romantic opera, to say nothing of modern music drama:

> The descendants of Scarlatti's operas now move in somewhat humble circles, but they still keep their original title—melodrama. The persecuted heroine, the splendid hero, the heavy father, the adventuress, and even the comic lovers, familiar to us. If no longer on the boards of the theatre, at least in the studies of the musicians, were still found echoes of the Real Teatro di S. Bartolomeo. The details of the plot may vary, but there is hardly any variation in the characters, who became pleasant old friends indeed. Which is their one and only recreation.

The scenery, too, was a most important part of the entertainment, there being generally three, if not four, separate scenes in each act, each no doubt of a most elaborate kind, judging from the designs that remain; and many operas included some sort of a transformation scene.

Scarlatti was no reformer, and he took things as he found them. It is his merit that he developed the form of the aria into a high degree of emotional and structural organisation. His time was that at which instrumental music was beginning to be recognised as a possible rival to the voice; and while his sympathies were all with the singers he was quick to take advantage of any other means that facilitated the expression of his thoughts. The chorus was disappearing from the opera, and Scarlatti helped its going by treating it in the most perfunctory way possible. The concerted finale as developed by Mozart was still a long way in the future.

Mr. Dent discusses Scarlatti's work in great detail and with the help of very numerous musical quotations. It is not, however, a technical discussion beyond the easy apprehension of the intelligent musical student, and for such as have the taste for musical history it is an engrossing chapter in that history.

II.

Mr. Newman, in his book on "Wagner," in the series entitled "The Music of the Masters," has not attempted a full critical study of Wagner in his little book. He has intended to "be useful," to offer a guide and a help to the plain man. Wagner as a musical dramatist is his subject, and the theorizings of Wagner in other lines of thought he disregards. It is Mr. Newman's thesis that only as a musical dramatist was Wagner great. As a "thinker" he is receding more and more from the public eye, while as a musician our admiration for him is probably greater than ever. The metaphysical and other talk with which Wagner himself and his partisans have submerged his music is to be put aside, and his art stands or falls by the amount of art there is in it, irrespective of what social or moral lesson can be drawn from it.

Mr. Newman's position is a perfectly clear one. He has developed it at length in his larger book on Wagner, which remains one of the most acute studies of the subject that we possess. We are given the same idea in this little book; the idea that "no great artist was ever so enormously affected in his views of the cosmos by the circumstances of his own life." The popular view of him as "a demigod of adamantine artistic will" is a mere myth. Like Shakespeare, he needed the impact of another brain upon his own before his imagination could be stimulated to its best flight. It is this mental constitution that accounts for Wagner's doing so litle really original work in his earlier days. In each successive work Mr. Newman finds that Wagner sang his own sorrows and joys, his own needs and desires of that particular moment, identifying the world's need, the world's ideal, with his own. Adding to this trait the further passion for making aesthetic generalizations from his own artistic nature, Mr. Newman finds the key to his psychology at his hand.

The most important deduction from this is perhaps to be seen in the explanation to which it leads of Wagner's artistic theories as to the musical drama: "He being a musician before everything else, the only true kind of drama is musical drama; he having an imperfect sense of poetry apart from music, non-musical poetry is an error; he being lacking in the peculiar feeling painters have for paintings and sculptors for sculpture, these arts are quite minor affairs." Hence his synthesis of the "art work of the future," in which all the arts are united, with mutual surrender of something of their individual importance for the benefit of the one whole, which is the "music drama." He was right, thinks Mr. Newman, in aiming at the "unitarian form," in which music and poetry reacted equally upon each other; but he was wrong in supposing that musical drama could "unify" all the arts or that any combination of them could satisfy the distinctive aesthetic cravings to which each ministers, or that musical drama covered the whole of life so completely that poetical drama was superfluous.

Mr. Newman's analyses of the successive works of Wagner find their greatest qualities always residing in the beauty and magnificence of the music, not upon the ethical side that Wagner was so anxious to have recognized. These analyses are compact, but certain and clear in their handling, giving the most important motives in musical notation and interpreting the music sympathetically. In fact, there is no bound to Mr. Newman's admiration of Wagner the musician. And whatever measure of agreement may be accorded to his judgment of the other elements of Wagner's work, and to his dissection of Wagner's character and psychology, it is stimulating and refreshing to come upon so strong and original and drastic a piece of criticism as he has delivered in this little book.

III.

Mr. Markham Lee's book on Tschaikowski is in the same series in a less distinguished performance; but it is a useful addition to the somewhat extensive Tschaikowski literature that has grown up in recent years. He is no slavish admirer of his subject. He recognizes that his work is very unequal, that there is much second-rate matter. And the weaker points of Tschaikowski's music—his undue pursuit of the morbid, his extravagance of idea, his noisiness of orchestration—have caused the enormous popularity of some of his music, while they have also injured the effect of his other pieces. For while these qualities create a demand for the performance of the other pieces, it lessens the effect produced by them through disappointment at their less apparent emotional or pessimistic trend.

Mr. Markham Lee plunges at once into a detailed consideration of Tschaikowski's music, piece by piece, with abundant thematic quotation. His criticism is searching and candid as well as sympathetic, and his descriptions are picturesque.

IV.

Mr. Mason in his book on modern music "From Grieg to Brahms" gave evidence of his philosophical temperament in the discussion of artistic principles and their concrete embodiment in the work of masters of diverse ideals and methods. Such a spirit is valuable, for there is much that is superficial and that treats only of exterior things in current writings about music. Mr. Mason is even more philosophical and more largely concerned with abstract principles in his latest book, "Beethoven and His Forerunners." He has tried to show, in the first half of it, the general course of evolution of the art, by which the foundations were laid for the work of Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven; in the second half he treats of those men, of their lives, and the circumstances of their time, their place in the history of music, and analyzes the essential qualities that gave them their significance.

Mr. Mason's abstract method takes him far afield into some general considerations as to the nature and development of the aesthetic sense of humanity, and the part that music has played therein. More specifically, he traces the general characteristics of the earlier manifestation of the art as it is disclosed in the music of Palestrina and his contemporaries, especially dwelling upon the contrast between their mysticism and the modern spirit. This he finds expressed in the difference between the idealistic impulse of our contemporary life, which fills the mind with a rich and various mass of contents, and the thin, impalpable, and austere conceptions of the mystic. The way in which music in the seventeenth century tended toward a fuller, more varied, and more poignant emotional expressiveness he follows out in some concrete detail and more generalization, and in the next chapter he undertakes to discover "the means by which musicians learned after long trial and patient experiment to give shape and integral life to all this motley array of feelings and effects they had summoned out of the depths of the human spirit." General artistic principles, general features of artistic design, the newly discovered methods of manipulating musical material, are the subjects of his study. Through this he has led up to the more particular consideration of Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven. As much biography as is necessary to show forth the character and quality of the men is given, but the chief consideration is devoted to their methods and achievements in music.

It is doubtful if this book of Mr. Mason's will prove as valuable or find as wide acceptance as his earlier one. It is a laborious task to follow him through some of his general reflections. It is a rarefied atmosphere through which he moves for long periods together. His subjective, reflective treatment offers much that is elusive to the inquiring mind. Mr. Mason, as we have said, gives much that is valuable in the contemporary discussion of music; but we are not sure but that in this book he has given too much of it at once.

V.

Mr. Gilman has gathered in his "Phases of Modern Music" a series of critical articles that have appeared recently in several periodicals, and that relate to some of the most important recent music and contemporaneous musicians. Strauss, MacDowell, Elgar, Loeffler, Mascagni, Grieg, Cornelius, Verdi and Wagner, "Parsifal," are some of the subjects he has chosen, all in reference to some of the recent developments in which they have taken a part. Mr. Gilman ranges himself uncompromisingly with the moderns. The newest note is the one he most persistently seeks and sounds. Realism, the descriptive, the imitative in music, is to him the highest good. The other kind, he suggests, is only "tonal arabesques," pandering to the "suscitating of pleasure in beautiful forms," "prestidigitation," his "idle revelment." Its supporters are merely "valiant feuilletonists with a theoretical axe to grind." Even Mr. MacDowell, must be reproved for occasionally using that "necessarily arbitrary and anomalous musical formula," the sonata form. The matter is not quite so unquestionable as Mr. Gilman assumes it to be.

Mr. Gilman not infrequently says an apt thing, gives a true characterization, delivers a pointed phrase in his discussions, but it is not often possible to follow him in all his ways; for they are sometimes overnimble and elusive. He has not yet the weight of reason and the authority of judgment that will no doubt come to one who reflects and thinks seriously as he does. And he is sometimes apparently more engrossed with the manner than with the matter of his discourse, going out of his way to cull the choice phrase, the "colorful" word, (to use one of his own.) Not to put too fine a point upon it, his style verges dangerously upon the précieux, rather than the distinguished; and a style is not good that has to such an extent the potency of exasperating the reader as his has.

VI.

Mr. Hanchett intends his book, "The Art of the Musician," to stimulate investigation of music—the real study of music itself, instead of the arts of playing and singing, which have so long been mistaken for it. He wishes, furthermore, to help mature lovers of music to understand the aims and purposes of the composer, some of the methods of his work, and to get some ground for fairly judging his attainments and results. The purpose is a useful one, and such help toward intelligent listening to music, and an understanding of what it really is, is needed. For though music is the most popular of all the arts, in its higher manifestations it is the least understood. There are different ways of going about the task Mr. Hanchett undertakes. His method involves a more or less close contact with the actual material of music, a consideration of the different qualities and possibilities of that material, and of what composers do with it and how they use it. Technicalities, the author declares, he relegates to the background, and uses them, when he does use them, with ample explanation. He assumes, however, the ability to read music easily, and provides examples in musical notation very copiously.

There is suggestiveness in this treatment, though there is not the completeness and logical development that the author seems to be aiming for. There is interest in his discussion of rhythm as the "Life of Music," and the devices that the masters have employed in this field to gain unity in the several movements of one work; of harmony as "The Soul of Music," and of melody as "The Beauty of Music." Thematic development, counterpoint, and form, classical and romantic music, are the subjects of some of the other chapters. And while Mr. Hanchett may not have got to the bottom of all that he discusses, much of what he says is useful and much will be illuminating to the intelligent student who follows him through his discourse and scrutinises the examples he gives. There is need of insistence upon his contention:

> The appeal of music is to the emotions, but it is an intelligent appeal. Perhaps its greatest virtue is its power of lifting the mind above sordid cares and worries and giving pleasure, stimulus, peace, and rest; but that power is multiplied many times by a thorough understanding of the structure and secret of the art. We have put too much emphasis upon technic, performance, display; too little upon expression, interpretation, education.

VII.

Mr. Fischer's book on Beethoven is no more a "character study" than any competent biography of an imposing personality must be. It is a good summary of the master's life, as it is presented in the original authorities on the subject, whose work the author has read to good purpose. There is much that is extant to be drawn upon, and there is little more in this volume than these authorities have provided. It is presented in a straightforward style, though without much distinction; and what the author has added in the way of critical estimate is unimportant. Nor has he thrown any new light upon the character and artistic nature of Beethoven. The chapter on Wagner's indebtedness to Beethoven is a collection of some of the significant references to be found abundantly in Wagner's numerous essays and autobiographical outgivings. He draws attention to some parallelisms that go to show Beethoven's artistic influence upon the later master. Thus, the use of the trombones "when solemnity was required," in the Benedictus of the mass in D and in the Ninth Symphony, is supposed to have influenced the instrumentation in "Parsifal" and the Funeral March in "Siegfried." The use of the pedal point as well as of the variation form is also adduced, though the specific instances of Wagner's employment of the variation form in the ways in which Beethoven developed it might be puzzling to find. Beethoven is credited with showing Wagner how to write "celestial music," as in the prelude to "Lohengrin," for violins and wood winds in the highest register, instead of for the conventional harps. Students of both masters will scarcely be convinced by this showing.

MAY

VIII.

The fifth volume in the Music Story Series, "The Story of the Violin," is among the better ones of that unequal collection. Mr. Stoeving is professor of his instrument at the Guildhall School, London, and a student of its history, and his work upon it is not unworthy of a place among the very numerous treatises of which the violin is the subject. There is a perennial fascination about it that no other musical instrument seems to possess. Its immemorial history, its important part in the development of musical art, the magic of the old makers that has so tantalized modern seekers for their secrets, the delicacy and subtlety of its qualities of excellence, all unite in making it an engrossing subject. Mr. Stoeving's style is somewhat exuberant, but he is in command of the facts of the literature and history of the subject, and his account of the origin and development of the violin is readable.

The students can trace its development back to the ninth century, but whether its earlier history was European or Oriental has not been determined, and many nations have possessed instruments that might be the violin's prototype. The early history of such instruments in Europe touches interesting phases of musical history, which the writer brings pleasantly forward with some exercise of the fancy and with plentiful use of illustrations drawn from mediaeval sources. The invention of the actual violin in the form substantially as we possess it is in a curious kind of doubt. Investigators have come into conflict over the claims of Gaspar Duiffoprugcar, to whom it is attributed, and there are singular discrepancies as to the facts and dates of his life. There is a whole literature about the great Cremonese makers, of which, of course, Mr. Stoeving can give but a brief suggestion. What of the "secret" of these makers? He thinks it a secret still, but careful and instinctive selection of woods, some small, insignificant item in the composition of the varnish, the lifetime of devotion and thought, the peculiarly favorable conditions, are, in his opinion, enough to account for the supremacy of the old makers.

The development of the art of playing and writing for the violin, the achievements of virtuosos, the growth in the importance of the instrument to the chief place it now occupies in music, are the subjects of a series of chapters that bring us down to the present day. This day Mr. Stoeving finds to be one of "doleful sterility," denoted chiefly by the output of "small pieces"—the "Characterstück" without character—the "Fantasiestück" without fancy. "What is needed is perhaps not another Viotti who can write classical concertos, a Vieuxtemps, a Bruch, a Brahms, or a Tschaikowsky who squeezes the fiddle like a lemon to get the most tone out of it for the sake of his orchestra." The violin world is "waiting for its Chopin, the man who possesses the master key with which to unlock as yet unexplored regions of poetry and beauty." So Mr. Stoeving concludes his survey of the literature of his instrument.

There are useful appendices discussing some of the older names and descriptions of the violin and giving chronological tables showing the descent of violin players in the different schools, lists of the chief makers, and a bibliography.

IX.

Mr. Pheips, in his study of "Parsifal," has made a courageous and ingenious attempt at a difficult task, such an attempt as has been made before, but never with complete success. He has made an English text fit to be sung to Wagner's score, preserving the sense and the emphasis of word and syllable. Some of the difficulties are insuperable, and Mr. Pheips has not surmounted them; but there is much that is strikingly good in his version. The text is printed opposite the German, page by page, with all the stage directions. A useful device is the indication of the orchestral passages that interrupt the declamation in order, as the translator says, to suggest the elaborate fullness of the orchestral score and to prevent an impression of the drama as being "a simple tale quickly told and easily slipped over in a casual half hour." In the choral passages, too, the text is so arranged as to give an idea of the complexity and of the cumulative effect of the drama in the theatre. It is one of the most useful of the "Parsifal" translations.

X.

Mr. Kobbé has revised and enlarged this analysis of Wagner's "Nibelung" trilogy, published some fifteen years ago, adding similar treatment of "Tristan und Isolde," "Die Meistersinger," and "Parsifal." His method is to tell the story of each drama concisely, quoting the "leading motives" as they appear in the score for the first time. He does not enter deeply into any critical consideration of the dramas, their philosophy, or their origins, and such comment as he makes upon them may not find universal acceptance from the thoughtful students of these works.

XI.

In "Parsifal, Lohengrin, and the Legend of the Holy Grail" the point of view is that which takes Wagner at his own valuation as a philosopher and an ethical teacher, wielding in Art a moral power. As both "Lohengrin" and "Parsifal" were drawn from the legends of the Holy Grail, there is an appropriateness in considering them together, notwithstanding the great differences in their musical and poetic style. The introduction discusses briefly the legends. The two dramas are expounded in detail and with ample musical quotation.

XII.

Mr. Jonson's Chopin book is "a handbook, a musical 'Baedeker,' a guide through the 'Thoughtland and Dreamland' of Chopin's kingdom." It is a compilation of what the critics and biographers have said about his works. These are listed in the order of their opus numbers, and under each heading are gathered excerpts from Niecks, Huneker, Barbedette, Kullak, Von Bülow, and the rest, as to their aesthetic quality and technical characteristics. The dedications and the dates of composition and publication are given. There is a short biographical and critical introduction, a bibliography, and tabular lists of the works. It is likely to be a useful compilation for hurried reference.

XIII.

Modern contrapuntal teaching is constantly in the direction of greater freedom and emancipation from the severity and strictness of the historical contrapuntal writers. Mr. Spalding's textbook promotes this freedom. It "offers suggestions for the cultivation of such a musical instinct that whenever polyphony is desirable in composition the various parts shall be made interesting and truly melodious." The treatment is stimulating and suggestive, with a great mass of examples by modern writers, from Bach to Tschaikowsky and Strauss, that are calculated to infuse the interest of a living reality into the study of the subject.

A Runaway Princess.

THE PRINCESS ELOPES. By Harold MacGrath. 16mo. Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Company.

A very willful young person is the Princess Hildegarde of Barcheit. She had been educated in France and England, which may have accounted for both her willfulness and her charm. Her uncle the Grand Duke, familiarly called among his sister States (behind his back) Brummbär, (Old Grumpy,) was, upon the whole, fairly generous to the madcap Princess, and gave her leave to choose her own husband from a collection he himself had selected. It was not his fault that Hildegarde was hard to please, finding this man too young and that too old, this too grave and that too gay—until, exasperated, the Grand Duke rose in his authority and decreed that Hildegarde should marry the Prince of Doppelkinn, whose vineyards and wines were among the best in the world. Doppelkinn was no more desirable to the Princess than the other proffered suitors, for did he not have a very red nose, and was he not past sixty?

So Hildegarde vowed that she would never marry him, and to circumvent her uncle's plans she drew up a false marriage certificate, which fooled no one, since her uncle knew all about it. But it did succeed in bringing about a meeting between the American Consul and the Hon. Betty Moore, the Princess's best friend. Let it be said right here, however, that the American Consul had nothing whatever to do with the affairs of the Princess Hildegarde other than to tell her story. His concerns were entirely with the Honorable Betty.

After the failure of the mock marriage Hildegarde sought other means of escaping the unpleasant marriage. She eloped. Not with any one, but quite alone. It was not her fault that Max Scharfenstein should have been suddenly obliged to quit the ducky and in his haste should have boarded the same railway carriage with herself, that he should have been mistaken as the Princess's eloping companion, that things should have looked very black for him—and for the matter of that for the Princess, too; that as luck would have it the wine brand used on the royal bottles of the Doppelkinn cellars should have been found on his arm, that that, together with a miniature of the Prince's first wife, which he had worn about his neck as a child, should have established his unmistakable identity as the heir to Doppelkinn; that the old Prince himself should have indignantly refused to marry the unwilling Princess—that, in short, everything should have eventually turned out to the perfect satisfaction of all concerned.

In the Duchy of Barcheit Court etiquette requires that into simply American half-a-day-old matters. The Princess rides about alone in the early morning, she flirts with any young Americans her friends call her Gretchen, and even the Duke himself shows himself unaware of anything like the formalities, in spite of the fact that for the purposes of the story the Princess and the Duke of Barcheit were poor relations.

A remarkably humorous tale that has been compared favorably with the work of Dickens, Stockton, Mark Twain and Jacobs.

THE DIVINE FIRE

The Divine Fire

Miss Sinclair's remarkable novel about a London poet is one of the literary sensations of the season and is just being printed for its sixth time.

Miss Mary Moss says in the Atlantic: "In all our new fiction I have found nothing worthy to compare with it—nothing even remotely approaching the same class."

The Princess Passes

The love story of travel in France, Switzerland and Italy is being highly praised by the leading reviews, and has gone to press for the fourth time. It is generally conceded to be as good as, and in some respects better than, the author's popular "LIGHTNING CONDUCTOR," which is now issued in a uniform illustrated edition.

* When not to be had of a local bookseller, the publishers will send these novels postpaid upon receipt of price.*

THE WINE PRESS

By ANNA ROBESON BROWN

This is the story of the shattering of a woman's faith in mankind, and man's gradual rehabilitation in her esteem in the person of an upright young doctor. The story opens in a modern girls' college, and passes by way of New York Bohemia to the New England seacoast. The love passages are more than pretty, they are powerful. The book is neither morbid nor bitter; it is strong.

JAPAN AND RUSSIA.

Richard Barry's "Port Arthur," a Book of Many-sided Leanings, and a Boys' Story.*

WAR as Zola wrote of it, as Verestchagin painted it—but war made more horrid and pitiless still by a desperate situation and the use on both sides of the latest modern mechanical refinements, all working together for the first time—such war it is the aim of these articles of Richard Barry to describe. The articles themselves are mostly collected from various magazines, and involve a deal of repetition, but a better notion of the conditions under which the Japanese worked and fought during the siege of Port Arthur is undoubtedly secured by having the scattered matter thus assembled.

Mr. Barry crawled about in that network of trenches by grace of which the Japanese at last burrowed into the fortress, he saw little brown men who peeped rifle in hand between the protecting sand bags fall dead at his elbow, he saw some of those bloody charges in the teeth of the Russian rifle fire and machine guns, he watched the little men patiently digging ditches, he crept into the bloody angle where the shelter of the living was built partly of rotting bodies of the slain, he was offered cigarettes and tea (in lacquer cups) in that gruesome fortress. He is his witness that he saw the Russian sharpshooters pick off the wounded as they writhed and crawled upon the dreadful ground between the lines of besieged and besiegers, and he gazed upon stricken men dying by slow inches for days for—in that zone of fire where it would have been suicide for their comrades to bear them in, though they could sometimes throw to the poor wretches biscuits and canteens of water.

He saw bodies horribly torn and mangled borne rearward, and had even the chance to dodge bullets himself. Generals talked with him kindly, Japanese officers showed him all there was to see, he watched the Russian use of searchlights, of star rockets that revealed night movements of the assailants, he heard the thunder of the great coast defense mortars brought over from Japan to reduce the Russian works—even took pictures of these dreadful engines in action.

Of all these things Mr. Barry tells, not avoiding, but rather insisting upon, the slaughter-pen details. Besides, he talks of Gen. Kodama, whom he calls the real director of the war. He interviewed Gen. Kodama, by the way, the great man (who is very small) sitting the while curled up in a large armchair wearing only a kimono and having his bare toes tucked under him. There is an interview with Marquis Ito also—in a second-class railway carriage in Japan.

The book is on the whole more to be commeaded for its material than the manner in which the material is used.

RUSSIAN HISTORY.

A SHORT HISTORY OF RUSSIA. By Mary Platt Parmele. New edition. 12mo. Pp. 288. Cloth. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.

THE RUSSIAN PEASANTRY. By Stepniak. New edition. 12mo. Pp. 651. Cloth. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.25 net.

RUSSIA, THE LAND OF THE GREAT WHITE CZAR. By E. C. Phillips, (Mrs. Horace B. Looker.) 12mo. Pp. 186. Cloth. Illustrated. New York: Cassell & Co., Ltd.

The above three books, like others on the subject which are now appearing, are of interest apropos of the current events connected with the country of the Czar. The new edition of Miss Parmele's account has been brought down to the Russo-Japanese war and the recent massacres in Russia. She writes in her new preface:

> If this book seems to have departed from the proper ideal of historic narrative—if it is the history of a power and not of a people—it is because the Russian people have had no history yet. There has been no evolution of a Russian nation, but only of a vast governing system; and the words "Russian Empire" stand for a majestic world-power in which the mass of its people have no part. A splendidly embroidered robe of Europeanism is worn over a chaotic, undeveloped mass of semi-barbarism. The reasons for this incongruity—the natural obstacles with which Russia has had to contend, the strange ethnic problems with which it has had to deal; its triumphant entry into the family of great nations; and the conditions leading to the disastrous conflict now in progress—such is the story this book has tried to tell.

The little volume contains a summary, "complete and picturesque," of the rise and progress of a great people in simple language and concise form. Besides the index, including principal names and events, there is also a list of the Princes of Russia, from Rurik down to Nicholas II.

In view of the recent social and industrial upheaval in Russia and the very great interest taken by British and American people in the progress of the Russian working classes toward liberty, a new edition has been issued of Stepniak's chief work, "The Russian Peasantry," which

SOMEWHAT PRO-RUSSIAN.

THE CASE OF RUSSIA. A Composite View. By Alfred Rambaud, Vladimir G. Simkovitch, J. Novicow, Peter Roberts, and Isaac A. Hoarwich. 12mo. Pp. 287. New York: Fox, Duffield & Co. $1.25.

This volume consists of a number of independent contributions, the purpose of which is to promote an understanding of Russia and gain for her by that means a wider sympathy than she seems now to possess in the world at large. Most of the matter, however, is somewhat vitiated by having been written some time ago, taking a false color from notions of Russian strength which existed before the present war.

The articles trace the history of the rise of the Russian Empire from a petty dependency of the great Mongol dominion; they touch upon Peter the Great's part in making semi-Oriental Russia a European power; they show how the Czar's Government has been constantly thwarted by the European powers proper, and how those Balkan States which Russia hoped would come to roost under her wing have become enamored of independence, and so bar her perpetually from Constantinople.

Then they trace events in the East—in Persia, in Turkestan, Manchuria, always giving Russia credit for the best intentions, and finally they attempt to get at the psychological traits of the Russian, show that absolutism is a non-Russian system grafted upon the people from Asia or German Europe or both, and to exhibit the nature of the religious intolerance which rests so heavily upon the Jews. The book tries to cover so wide a field as to leave little room for skilful presentation of the ideas advanced.

A STORY FOR BOYS.

"At the Fall of Port Arthur" (Boston: Lee & Shepard, $1.25) is a book designed to dilute Russo-Japanese war interest into entertainment and (perhaps) instruction for boys. Mr. Edward Stratemeyer, the author, has taken two heroes of his, who have appeared in former stories, Larry Russell and Luke Striker, and taken these Americans into the war zone, there to be captured by the Russians, and then recaptured by the Japanese, in whose navy the venturesome pair take service so as to see the war at close range and be in at the death at Port Arthur.

JAPANESE CHARACTERISTICS.

Dr. Sidney L. Gulick's volume, "The Evolution of the Japanese," is appearing this week in its fourth edition, revised and enlarged, through the Fleming H. Revell Company. It contains a new preface and numerous changes in the text, which have been turned into notes and placed at the end of the chapters to which they belong. In the course of the preface the author indicates the alterations he has made:

> Fuller acquaintance with the people since the manuscript for this study was prepared has brought into greater prominence in my own mind certain traits of Japanese national character. Important among them is the universal trait of emotional repression, discussed in the text under the head of "Stoicism." * * * Another most important trait is doubtless that of "gi-ri," a term impossible of adequate translation into English. The two syllables of the word stand for two Chinese ideographs, which mean "justice," "propriety," "duty," and "reason," "meaning," "principle." * * * A third trait needing additional emphasis is the sense of gratitude. * * * Still another important feature of Japanese character is the exceeding gentleness and culture of the common people. * * * Closely connected with gentleness is the no less striking feature of a universal obedience to rulers. * * * Quite as important as any other is the ability of Japan in administrative organization. * * * Attention should also be drawn to the peculiar national feeling about money. Direct acceptance of fees is felt to be degrading. * * * This trait is doubtless due to refined feeling in regard to the appearance of greed or covetousness. * * * The present war is bringing to light * * * the readiness to die in battle and the utter disregard of danger manifested by the common soldier. * * * The strong outburst of religious

As Dr. Gulick again points out in this preface, the book has a double purpose: "To study the interdependence of social and psychic evolution, illustrating the general principles by an examination of Japanese developments," and "the study of Japanese characteristics and development as depending on universal principles of social and psychic evolution."

"SPIRIT" OF THE JAPANESE.

George Meredith has written an introduction to "The Japanese Spirit," by Okakura-Yoshisaburo, in which he writes of the book:

> These lectures by a son of the land, delivered at the University of London, are compendious and explicit in a degree that enables us to form a summary of much that has been otherwise particularly obscure, so that we get nearer to the secret of this singular race than we have had the chance of doing before.

The author tells briefly what he considers to be the essentials to an understanding of Japan to-day, its political, religious, and social qualities of basic importance. The book will appear in a few days with the imprint of James Pott & Co.

Essays by Vernon Lee.

THE ENCHANTED WOODS AND OTHER ESSAYS ON THE GENIUS OF PLACES. By Vernon Lee. Cloth, 12mo. Pp. x.-321. New York: John Lane.

Very charming are the essays in Vernon Lee's latest book, "The Enchanted Woods." They are not very deep; many of them are quite superficial, but they are charming, and if not full of thought themselves, may easily cause thought in those who read them. A "ragbag," their author calls her book, in a letter of dedication; "take this new ragbag of impressions with you next time, my dear," she writes to a friend, "* * * and pull out some of the contents at random. For the only justification of my idle wanderings is if their sunshine and romance may amuse, for a moment, people more useful, though not more willing, than myself."

Vernon Lee has lived many years in Italy, and most of the essays in the new volume deal with aspects of Italian life. But we are inclined to think that those referring to non-Italian subjects are more interesting.

Take this little divagation on travel, from the essay which gives its name to the volume—an essay, by the way, that recalls to some extent Kenneth Graham's wonderful children's stories, "In the Golden Days."

> My growing belief is that the journeys richest in pleasant memories are those undertaken accidentally, or under the stress of necessity; moreover, that the most interesting places are those we stray into, or just deflect toward, as we wander for the sake of friends or work, or even in humbler quest of cheapness of living or economy of health. * * * As we continue to live, and see more of our own and other folks' lives behind, or alongside of us, there arises a dim comprehension of some mysterious law by which the good things of life, all the happiness—nay the very power of being happy—are not life's aims, but life's furthcrance, and their true possession depends on willing and uncalculating response to life's manifold and changing beckonings and behests. * * * All we can do, while thus traveling we know neither whence nor whither, is to keep our eyes clear, our feet undefiled, to drop as much useless baggage as possible, and fill our hands with the fruits and herbs, sweet or salutary, of the roadside.

The author laughs sometimes at the Germans, but she can appreciate them, too. Her ridicule is not bitter. They possess, she notes, "a genius for contemplation of an aesthetic, sentimental, yet homely kind." And this genius Vernon Lee finds responsible for much that is beautiful in Germany.

> It is this spirit of roast veal in ruined castles and coffee and cinnamon cake in haunted forest glades which accounts for the Alpine landscapes and charming household details of Durer and the little masters; accounts also for the lovable side of rough, dogmatic old Martin Luther; and nowadays for whatever is sane in the genius of Wagner. * * * The Germans enjoy themselves through several senses at once, in a confused, suffused, permeating manner which does away with definite images and thoughts, (and hence with literature and the plastic arts as an adequate expression,) but accumulates a vast bulk of indefinable emotion. Their feeling for the Rhine is typical of this. * * * You cannot paint the Rhine; you cannot even describe it. But you can set the Rhine to music. And as she has done by the Rhine, so Germany has done by all her deep, inexplicit emotion, making those indefinable moods of hers, sensual and spiritual at once, melancholy yet pleasant, into music, complex and yet perfectly fused, indefinable and soul-subduing as they."

Vernon Lee hates to see what she knows she ought to see. She is unconventional in that respect. Thus, when she should have been "doing" the French Exposition of 1900 she was exploring the "Left Bank" of the Seine—she is conventional enough to think that she has discovered that place herself. The "pleasantest and (such is human perverseness!) the most suggestive impression" she derived from Mont St. Michel was the insistence of her landlady, whom she had not seen during her stay, that the maid should put a little orange flower water in a glass of water the author had asked for.

There used to be rules of grammar—that relatives must have antecedents; that a sentence must contain a verb; that curiously enough; possibly that is why they are the best. Vernon Lee, like many other writers, disdains to be bound by them. She is fond of strained expressions—as are many others to-day; did Whistler start the fad when he applied musical terms to the art of painting? Of what use is it to say that a sunrise had been "perfectly pure," or that a sunset was "tragic"?

THE PRINCESS NUR MAHAL.

THE GREAT MOGUL. By Louis Tracy, Author of "The Wings of the Morning" and "The Pillar of Light." Illustrations by J. C. Chase. 12mo. Pp. 346. New York: Edward J. Clode.

To link in one romance the glamour of Elizabeth's England and the Oriental magnificence of her Indian contemporary, Akbar the Great, shows a bold and adventurous imagination. This thing Louis Tracy has done, and the story he has woven of such rich material is a good story to read whenever of an idle evening you are in the notion to cheat yourself with borrowed splendors and lose yourself in the ageless land of dreams.

Good Queen Bess is dead when the story begins, the wrecks of the shattered Armada have strewn the Scottish coast, his "Sowship" James Stuart rules at Whitehall, but the Englishmen are the same Englishmen who flattered and courted Elizabeth and sailed and fought with Drake. Mr. Tracy takes two such adventurous Englishmen, one of them a huge fellow, with the strength of a yoke of oxen, and gives them fit parts in a game to fit the times. First they incur the royal displeasure by rescuing two pretty English girls from the very palace of the Spanish Ambassador, and, the authorities abetting, are kidnapped by the Inquisition and sent toward Spain. However, in the harbor of Lisbon they escape to a Portuguese ship bound for India, and so fare around the Cape of Good Hope and come to Delhi and Agra, where that beautiful Princess, Nur Mahal, is about to begin her shining career. This Nur Mahal (whom even cold history counts one of the seven women of the world, with Helen and Cleopatra and Mary of Scotland and the rest,) is the candle about whose fierce and lovely flame all the moths of Mr. Tracy's romance flutter. Walter Mowbray meets her—yellow-robed, dark-eyed, lithe, capricious—in the garden of her father's house, that old Persian merchant he was, who, coming a stranger to India, rose to be First Minister of Akbar, and Roger Sainton, the giant, (whom the Orientals called the man-elephant,) notes that the wonder woman looks upon his companion kindly. As she does, though, a Rajput Prince and the Emperor's own son and heir, Jahangir, are even then at daggers drawn for the honor of her rosy hand. Thus the stuff of which tragedies and epics are made—the slaying of many men and the wreck of dynasties. Great Akbar, Orientally scornful of his graceless son, gave the lady to wife to the Rajput Prince, his rival, but Great Akbar was presently gathered to his fathers, and the graceless son has his innings as Emperor in his father's room.

So the plots multiply and the adventures throng under the hot Indian sun or the teeming Indian stars. Now Mowbray is fighting hand to hand with Jahangir himself; now he flees northward with Nur Mahal (a demure widow) by his side; now he stands with the Princess in a millet field and tells her of his lady love in London town; now he rescues Christian prisoners from Jahangir's minions; now he is himself in chains; now he stands by the Emperor's side and fights against the rebels while Nur Mahal looks on. And the man-elephant; now that huge bulk jests in heavy Yorkshire dialect; now he casts a ton weight of stone upon a tiger, toppling over the royal throne and the Emperor in the act; now he falls a victim to the mature beauties and soft wiles of a captive Portuguese Countess. Again he fights through a mile of enemies with the plump figure of this lady resting upon his left arm, and then he slays a great war elephant with two mighty strokes of a huge iron bar.

It is romance which rides a great pace with a free rein—a canvas made of broad, sweeping strokes and effective in measure and degree according. It will not bear close critical inspection, of course—but it will reward reading.

Myrtle Reed's Autobiography.

G. P. Putnam's Sons have received the following biographical note sent them on request by Miss Myrtle Reed, author of "The Master's Violin," "The Book of Clever Beasts," "Lavender and Old Lace," &c.:

> I discovered America thirty years ago, and I liked it so well that I have not since left the country. When I came I had a pen in one hand, a sheet of paper in the other, and was yelling for ink. At this my father knew that I was destined for the fourth estate, and ran to the dictionary for a name that would look well in print. Hence my title, which everybody thinks a pseudonym, and the English reviewers insist to be the name of a "gentleman," one of them saying: "The gentleman who calls himself Myrtle Reed." Don't you call that hard when I have always been a perfect lady? After this auspicious beginning, the rest of my career is history. See chronicles Knickerbocker Press last seven years.

A California Story.

THE VISION OF ELIJAH BERI. By Frank Lewis Nason. 12mo. Boston: Little, Brown & Co.

This is a novel centring about the orange groves of California. Elijah Beri, a strange mixture of visionary and strait-laced New Englander, came to California when the boom of its small towns was thundering over the country. He settled in an arid part of California and dreamed of the days when, through the means of irrigation and cultivation, he should have established the greatest orange groves in the world.

Mr. Nason has drawn the character of Elijah with excellent precision and clearness. A man of force and eloquence, of strong desires and unusual magnetism, he was nevertheless blinded in his judgments and weak to his own undoing. The love element of the story is brisk and holds the attention. One feels sorry for Elijah in the mental poverty of his wife, but even while pitying him a doubt creeps into the mind whether, after all, Amy was not to be pitied too. On Helen Lonsdale, the fine young business woman who comes under the magnetic charm of Elijah Beri, the author has lavished all the graces of mind and body, just as in Ralph Winston, Elijah's partner, and Helen's lover, he has put all the force and strength of manhood. Helen and Ralph seem a trifle exaggerated for real life—Elijah and Amy are truer to nature.

Elijah's innate avarice, his greed for gold and power, his weakness at the moment when he should have been strongest, his cowardice and fear of exposure and imprisonment, all these helped to crush him. Step by step we follow his mental and moral decline to the point when, goaded by jealousy, fear, and fury, he turned the full course of the pent-up water of the hills against Ralph's newly constructed dam and then himself plunged headlong down the cliffs.

Love and Sacrifice.

AN ABBREVIAT ABELARD AND HELOISE. A Love Story by Mary Ives Todd. 12mo. New York: The Grafton Press. $1.50.

Here is a book obviously written with a purpose. The emancipation of mankind in matters of religion especially occupies much of the author's attention. The Reverend Abel Allen of Boston, pale and aesthetic—the modern Abelard—is the adored idol of the feminine members of his flock. Impervious to their charms, however, he pursues his solitary way until Heloise Mills appears upon the horizon, then suddenly the Reverend Abel discovers the meaning of love.

Heloise is not orthodox in her beliefs, nor can she tolerate the orthodoxy of Abel's creed. After the death of her father Heloise disappears from Boston, and the Reverend Abel is cast into the depth of gloom. But through the means of marked newspapers, which she happily leaves behind, he traces her to Los Angeles and in his mind's eye already sees her the bride of some Western unworthy. Jealousy gnaws "like a worm i' the bud," and by and by the Reverend Abel languishes and grows paler than ever. It is during his illness that he suddenly sees the broader religious course based upon science rather than faith. He resigns his pastorate and seeks health and Heloise in Los Angeles.

However, just why Heloise persists in her refusal to marry Abelard, just what she expects to accomplish, and where it all leads to in the end, it is hard to discover from the story. After carefully reading the 327 pages of arguments and rather dreary love story, one is inclined to ask of the author, "What's the use?"

AN INTERESTING LAW BOOK.

Paul Jones, LL. B., is the author of a law book which is singularly interesting to a considerable class of readers, and it seems to have been for him, in a way, a labor of love. It is "privately printed," and very well printed, too, in neat binding, with gilt top that sets the seal of personal nicety on it, as if to emphasize the fact that it is not the ordinary professional, still less the ordinary trade, product. It bears evidence of a lot of painstaking work, is written in a style excellent for its purpose, and offers very few of those slips of the pen or proofreader that are apt to invade in force the pages of the amateur. An "amateur," as we have intimated, Mr. Jones is in the good old sense of the word, since he is plainly fond of his subject and of his task, but he is far from showing himself one in his mode of treatment or in the results he aims at and quite remarkably reaches.

The title of his book is "The Commercial Power of Congress," and his object is to trace the history and show the present authoritative interpretation of that pregnant declaration of the Constitution of the United States: "Congress shall have power * * * to regulate commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes." At the present moment much attention is being given to the application of this provision to the effort to regulate what are popularly known as "trusts"—usually with a very large T—and to the effort to regulate the charges of transportation companies. But whatever authority may finally be recognized as lodged in Congress for these two purposes—very vague and complex and important purposes they are—it must be relatively a novel outcome of more than a century of legislation and adjudication under the clause quoted. Previous to this outcome there had been an immense development of commerce and of the varied interests and activities involved in commerce, and the "commercial power of Congress" had been slowly assuming force and extending its scope until the effect of its exercise had gradually entered into the daily life of the people. So completely was this the case that public opinion may be said to have been rendered almost unconscious of the existence of the power and of the intimate and important consequences of its exercise. The fourth generation since the adoption of the Federal Constitution is passing away. It is a generation used to the daily employment of the highest forms of steam and electricity—a generation that goes to the Pacific from the Atlantic more easily than George Washington could hope to reach New York from Philadelphia, and which knows what is occurring in Manila more promptly than news could reach the first President, in this city, from the other side of the East River. It is a generation with which the trade of China is larger than was the total trade of the continent when the Constitution was adopted. And practically the law which has "regulated" the evolution of these enormous commercial changes has flowed from the score of words in the Constitution above quoted.

It was the beginning of this wonderful evolution that caused "the Fathers of the Constitution. Nay, it was the needs already arising from this nascent evolution which, more than anything else, gave rise to the Constitution itself. Because under the Articles of Confederation there was no certainty or stability, but great confusion, in the trade with foreign nations and among the several States; because currency and customs dues and the laws of credit were varying and conflicting and domestic and foreign trade were bound in a hopeless tangle, the Constitution was seen to be imperative. The convention showed great wisdom in framing the provision for power to remedy these intolerable evils. The general principle of Federal regulation was stated; the general principle of powers conferred and powers reserved was also stated, and then the Congress, greatly aided by the Supreme Court, proceeded slowly and gradually to work out the problem as it presented itself from year to year.

Mr. Jones has undertaken to trace this process in a manner not only satisfactory to the professional lawyer, but to be understanded of the people, and he has had remarkable success. One admirable feature of his book is the very full series of references he gives to the court decisions. Of these we have only one complaint to make. Following the custom of his profession, he rarely gives the dates of decisions; to the lay reader these would be extremely useful. And we wish he had felt like making an index, and an adequate one, though we know it would have been a tiresome task. But these suggestions seem a little grudging where there is so much good work to be grateful for.

SHAKESPEARE'S FAME.

An English critic of renown has felt it worth his while to insinuate that some of Mr. George Bernard Shaw's recent remarks humorously condemning Shakespeare serve a good purpose. The English-speaking people, he thinks, make a fetich of Shakespeare's name. Half-educated folks have come to regard him as a divinity who could do no wrong. This is probably true, but we doubt if the felicitous irony of Shaw will have any effect whatever upon the minds of such persons. It would be well, of course, if the masses possessed a high order of literary judgment. A day may come, though it is yet far off, when the multitude of men may be able to praise not only Shakespeare, but Milton and Goethe, Dante and Browning, with discrimination. Meanwhile, it seems to us that the Shakespeare fetich, as our English critic calls it, is a good thing. It is better for the multitude to think well of the greatest poet the world has ever known than to think ill of him; and every shrewd observer must know that, in the present state of artistic and literary culture, the multitude must do one or the other. In reckoning with the awakening mind of a people it is well to make allowances.

The general ignorance of Shakespeare is a deplorable fact, as remarkable as the general reverence for his name. Only the other day a distinguished American educator was a witness in a suit at law, and the curious exigencies of the case required that he should submit to examination touching his knowledge of the tragedy of "Romeo and Juliet." The witness not only failed to place lines quoted by counsel from the play, but he could not say who Tybalt was, although he asserted that Juliet's dangerous cousin was "not a prominent character." He could not tell with which of the two warring houses of Verona Benvolio was connected, and could not even remember the names of the houses. Perhaps he had even forgotten the dying Mercutio's imprecation of a plague on both of them. As for Mercutio, the witness could not state his relationship to other personages in the play, nor could he tell in what part of Italy the scene of the play was laid. He had even forgotten the name of the city.

Thus an educator, who had been advertised as a lecturer on this very tragedy, failed in an examination from which any member of a rural Shakespeare class should have emerged triumphantly. But this does not prove that this gentleman might not utter many wise words on this formed his mind upon it.

Meanwhile, Mr. Bernard Shaw's clever comic criticism of Shakespeare, (Mr. Shaw is at present the Marcelline of British letters,) and Mr. Arthur Walkley's unfavorable comparisons of Shakespeare's plays with the conversational comedies of the contemporary French stage, which deal exclusively with one topic avoided in polite conversation elsewhere, serve, not to weaken the popular fetich, but merely to arouse the ire of a few true Shakespeareans whose ire is easily aroused. Mr. Sydney Lee has lately declared in public at a Shakespeare birthday dinner in England that Mr. Walkley prefers chocolate creams to venison, (forgetting for the moment that the association of venison with Shakespeare's name is bound to recall Sir Thomas Lucy's stolen deer,) and that Mr. Shaw is best described in Bacon's phrase that "vainglorious men are the scorn of wise men, the admiration of fools, the idols of parasites, and the slaves of their own vaunts." Mr. Lee's ire will only amuse Mr. Shaw, however, and set him to jesting anew.

The plans for the proposed national memorial to the poet in London have not yet taken shape. There seems to be no room for doubt, however, that most of the influential persons interested in the scheme favor a worthy statue or a monument, conspicuously placed, containing a statue. Such is the idea of Mr. Richard Badger, the wealthy Englishman, who was the chief instigator of the movement, and who has been thus far the largest contributor to the fund.

THAT SLEEPING SWORD.

Our readers continue to manifest great interest in Mr. McLandburg Wilson's felicitous quatrain touching the unsettled repose of the innate martial spirit of the President of the United States:

His sword within his scabbard sleeps,
But, mercy! how it snores!

They continue, also, their efforts to produce a first couplet for the Roosevelt quatrain more apt and melodious than Mr. Wilson's, originally contributed to Tom Watson's Magazine, which was as follows:

Our President's a man of peace,
Preparedness he implores.

Now, the first line of Mr. Wilson's couplet is not so bad. Of course, with the qualification, our President is a man of peace—a man of peace ever alive to the possibility of war and its stimulating effect on latent patriotism. But of "preparedness" we are compelled to say, as Polonius said of "beautified"—"'tis a vile phrase." Moreover, it spells the metre, and for these reasons we have been urging that the quatrain be rebuilded. Last week we printed a few suggestions from our readers for a new first couplet, and this week our mails have been burdened with many letters containing other suggestions. For instance, a "Constant Reader" proffers:

In arts of war he's trained, yet keeps
His eye on peaceful scores,

but this seems open to criticism. What are "peaceful scores"? We must have no ambiguity in this matter? "Constant Reader's" suggestion, however, is much better than "a tinker's," which is positively unintelligible:

At weaklings" now and then he leaps,
E'er wobs the "gods" encores!

We confess our inability to follow this tinker unless he means that the President habitually "plays to the gallery," in which case the idea is not well expressed. Much better, in its patriotic quality, and as a statement of fact, is this couplet from another reader:

The peace of justice well he keeps,
And unjust wars he scores!

"Scores," it may be needful to explain, is here used in the sense of "denounces." Another rhymes "snores," in three several specimen couplets, with "bristling shores," "neutral shores," and "strenuous shores," the neutral shores being the best kind for any nation to have.

As yet, however, the quatrain as Mr. Wilson originally wrote it has not been greatly improved upon. "Preparedness" is a halting and ineffective word for verse, and the word "implores" scarcely fits any of the President's moods. But we fear the lines must stand as they were written unless the poet himself chooses to revise them.

MAKING an entry in his diary of the death of Francis H. Palgrave—he calls him "Frank"—Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff observes: "Many people found the torrential rush of his talk intolerably tiresome, but I cannot say that that was my experience." This is his characteristic attitude toward most of the people and the talk of which Grant Duff's diary is in one way a record. Sir Mountstuart is probably one of the last of the diarists. He is at a considerable distance, it must be confessed, from Pepys and Evelyn and the more noted of their fellows, in the interest and value of his records; but there have been few more industrious than he. These two volumes are the thirteenth and fourteenth of the notes which he began to select from his diary in 1890, and which extend from New Year's Day in 1851, just after he had taken his degree at Oxford. They bring him down to Jan. 22, 1901, when as a member of the Privy Council he took the oath to King Edward VII. There, he declares, he ends. The "Notes from a Diary" are published in New York by Messrs. E. P. Dutton & Co.

The chief interests of this diarist's life have been politics and administration; but he carefully avoids both in the matter he has selected from his diaries. He has said what he had to say on these subjects in his speeches and in his other books. And he also avoids bringing in his dislikes. Agreeable subjects are the ones he has preferred to discuss. How vast and varied are the "tracts of interest" that lie within the field of the busy man's life these diaries disclose. That they will be as interesting to other people as they are to him he does not hope; books of this kind survive chiefly in "the largest libraries." He has accomplished his purpose if he has preserved "some interesting and amusing things that would otherwise have soon disappeared."

Not much that is human, especially that belongs to the upper strata of humanity, is alien to Sir Mountstuart. His observation, with extensive view, surveys mankind from China to Peru, and he never omits the opportunity to extract what he can out of travelers from any of the intervening districts. His acquaintance is enormous, and seems to embrace most people of distinction in any walk of life in England. Prime Ministers, Bishops, poets, philosophers, travelers, politicians, Dukes, Duchesses, and the nobility and gentry in general are the personages who chiefly people his pages and whose conversations, as reports on all imaginable topics. "We hear over a variety of subjects," he observes of one of his own dinner parties; he serves the same sort of meal between these four covers. A more inveterate breakfaster and diner-out, it would seem, can scarcely exist. The Club, the XY Club, the Breakfast Club, Grillions, the Literary Society, the Dilettanti, the Omar Khayyam Club, are only some of the scenes of his degustations; to say nothing of his private invitations. Anything and everything from the table talk that strikes his fancy for any reason goes down on his record. Of consecutive connection in his pages there is nothing; nor are such pages meet for consecutive reading of long duration. They are bed-candle reading. As such they will divert, interest, and offer diverse suggestion to different people.

All sorts of anecdotes that people have told one he jots down. Mr. J. R. Green once recounted his experience of Ruskin in a lecture at Oxford on Botticelli, which he had gone to Oxford to hear:

The lecture began with a few words about that painter. Presently, however, he said: "Before I can make you understand Sandro Botticelli you must understand Fra Angelico and the monastic system of the Middle Ages." Then followed a sentence or two upon Fra Angelico and the monastic system of the Middle Ages, but ere long he exclaimed: "Yet what is the good of talking to you about Fra Angelico and the monastic system of the Middle Ages? All your sons have latch-keys," and the rest of the discourse was devoted to that subject.

Walking with Frederic Harrison, they came upon a Gothic building on the Embankment, the next house to the west of the Temple Gardens. Harrison said, "I must really find out what that is."

He walked across the street as he spoke and put the question to some people who were standing at the gate. It turned out to be the estate office of Mr. Astor, the American millionaire—a strange sign of the times.

An American who lives in Italy was asked if he knew the Vanderbilts. "No," he replied, "it is long since I left the United States. When I was there they were only Vanderbuilding, you know."

Another friend told him one amusing story of Odo Russell and Beaconsfield. The latter, so Russell found, intended to address the diplomats assembled at Berlin in a French speech.

Knowing the Premier's acquaintance with the tongue of the Gaul to be very imperfect, he was in despair, but as usual proved equal to the occasion. "It will," said he, "be a very great disappointment." "Why?" said Lord Beaconsfield. "Because," answered Odo,

"knowing that you are a great master of English eloquence, they have been looking forward to your addressing them in English as to a great intellectual treat."

"You don't say so," was the rejoinder, and the French speech was torn up.

They told him, too, of a remark made by George Darwin's son, a mere child about eight years old, which was "simply astounding." "What are metaphysics?" some one asked, and some one else answered jestingly, "It is what you take after physic." The child, it seems, was not satisfied with this—and might well not have been—but in a few minutes rejoined, "I see what it is; you think, and you think, and you think, and then you say that two and two are about five!"

His literary friends give him an entertaining budget of gossip. Thus John Murray, the publisher, declared that there was one English poet for whom no font of type sufficed, a necessary preliminary to reprinting his works being largely to reinforce the "i's" and "v's." This was Tennyson, and the cause was the constant recurrence of the word "love" in his writings! He mentioned also that Clark, the Edinburgh printer, had told him that he had paid £40,000 in wages to compositors for setting up the works of Walter Scott for the house of Adam Black alone.

Animal stories delight him, as the President of Magdalen's account of an Aberdeen terrier, who prayed to the sun. A long ray of light on a cold Autumn day was falling through an opening in the shutter, but it came down but slowly toward the floor. The dog, feeling very cold, did what he was in the habit of doing when he wanted anything, and begged earnestly. "He was evidently a fire-worshipper." And the cat, who stopped a passerby by seizing her dress with his teeth, led her to the doorbell of his home, which she rang, and so gained his object of being let into the house, is to Sir Mountstuart worth chronicling. He is evidently a collector of minerals, and records his acquisitions with a collector's pride—a beryllonite, "very nicely cut," in its facetted form indistinguishable from rock crystal; "the very rare green variety of spodumene," and many more. Plants and flowers have another corner in his heart, and a frequent mention in his diary; a specimen of a rare plant from South Devon charms him, as well as rambles in search of the earliest blossoms, which he names always by their botanical names. His versatility perhaps could not better be summed up than by the entry he makes of one July day in his life:

Mr. Spillman, with whom I have had some correspondence of late about Greece and squirrels, told me to-day that Watts had said to him: "If I had been as well taught as Titian I should have been a far greater painter." Un fier mot!

There is a certain touch of actuality in these rambling records that gives them interest. And while Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff will probably never emerge as a very striking figure in contemporary English history, his diaries show him as a man in contact with some of the most interesting phases of life at many points.

Immigration and Emigration.

In "The Problem of the Immigrant," James Davenport Whelpley gives a brief discussion, with a summary of conditions, laws, and regulations governing the movement of population to and from the British Empire, the United States, France, Germany, Belgium, Austria-Hungary, Russia, Spain, Portugal, Denmark, the Netherlands, Switzerland, Italy, and Scandinavia.

The author studied the immigration and emigration conditions in Europe for a year and decided to put into book form the data he secured through Government officials, Ambassadors, Consular representatives, Attachés of Embassies, and others who could give the material he desired.

The opening chapters of the book are general and treat of emigration as an international affair, and immigration and emigration laws of Europe. The introduction is a résumé of the problem and the present conditions, as compared with those of twenty years ago. Besides giving the laws of emigration and immigration, Mr. Whelpley has included the reasons for emigration, the area and population of the country under consideration, and other matters connected with the subject. E. P. Dutton & Co. are the American publishers of the book.

A New Story by Howells.

A new novel by William Dean Howells is promised by the Harpers for some time early in June. No one will be surprised to learn that it is a novel of New England life. The familiar protagonist, they say, is a young woman with somewhat advanced—not to say serious—views of her function in the world. She is "educated," of course, and is a lecturer in a Western college; besides, there's an Englishman in love with her. Her problem is to reconcile her aspirations with the Englishman, and for, the better solution of that problem she visits a matrimonially ingenious aunt of hers (in New Hampshire) and meets people and encounters things. Mr. Howells's admirers do not need to be told how to discount such a prospectus as this.

"English Embroidery."

"The history of needlecraft," writes A. F. Kendrick in the introductory chapter of "English Embroidery," (in Newnes's Library of the Applied Arts. 8vo, pp. 125, gilt top, cloth. New York: Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons, $2.50,) "holds a prominent place in the art record of any country. The use of the needle must have become necessary with the very first beginnings of civilization, and plain stitching instinctively developed into ornamental embroidery of some sort."

The book describes needlework in England from the period when the social life of the women of England was very different from what it has been during the past few centuries" down through the eighteenth century. However, it does not provide descriptions of every important example of embroidery existing, and contains only accounts of examples that, in the author's opinion, are "undoubtedly English," although attributed by other writers to French, Burgundian, Flemish, German, or Italian workers. The question of "stitchery" has not been discussed.

The eight chapters have been divided into the following periods: The Anglo-Saxon, the Norman and Early English, the "Great" period, (between 1270 and 1330,) the period of decline and revival in embroidery, (between 1330 and 1530,) the sixteenth century, the seventeenth century, and the eighteenth century. A long list of "useful books of reference" has been provided. There are also many illustrations of notable examples, in half-tone, and four are in the original colors. The pictures include photographic reproductions of stoles, copes, altar pieces, fragments from mantles, coverlets, wearing apparel, samplers, and other articles, each of which is described in the text.

Forestry.

Part II. of the work on forestry prepared by Gifford Pinchot, Forester of the United States Department of Agriculture and Chief of the Bureau of Forestry, "A Primer of Forestry," is now being sent out. It deals with "Practical Forestry," the purpose of which is "to make the forest render its best service to man in such a way as to increase rather than to diminish its usefulness to the future." The book is issued in two parts. In the first of the forest, a discussion given of the yield of a forest, and a description of the different systems of cutting trees so as to give the best results. The second section discusses "Work in the Woods," and contains a contrast of conservative and ordinary lumbering; information and suggestions on the work from the time the tree is found standing in the forest until it passes through the mill. Chapter III., entitled "The Weather and the Streams," discusses the influence forests have on climate, and explains the effect of forests on moisture, temperature, evaporation, and fallen rain. The book closes with a brief sketch of the history of forestry in the United States and abroad. Important events in forestry in this country are recorded down to the beginning of 1905.

The illustrations include eighteen plates and forty-seven figures. The first volume appeared in 1899, and is reported to have passed through several editions. It deals with the life of a single tree, trees as they exist in a forest, the life of a forest, and the "enemies" of the forest. The work is in two volumes.

Playing Cards.

Frederic Jessel, as already announced in our cable dispatches, has compiled a bibliography of the works in English on playing cards and gaming, which Longmans, Green & Co. will publish. The author writes that he has prepared the volume for those who are interested in books on the subject, and adds:

I have described the title of every work, however slight, on cards or gaming that I have been able to discover, and have also included all books which contain allusions, of sufficient importance to be recorded, to those subjects.

There are also a few plays and works of fiction which depend on gaming for their plots; books that treat of or make reference to conjuring, fortune telling, and other tricks done with cards; the different card games—bézique, loo, cribbage, écarté, euchre, napoleon, piquet, poker, whist, &c. There are the names and descriptions of French works on the subject of cards and gaming, German, Italian, and English books, among the earliest volumes mentioned being Abbé Rive's "Eclaircissements sur l'Invention des Cartes à jouer," published in Paris in 1780; J. G. I. Breitkopf's "Versuch den Ursprung der Spielkarten zu erforschen," printed in Leipsig in 1784, and Samuel Weller Singer's "Researches Into the History of Playing Cards, with Illustrations of the Origin of Printing and Engraving on Wood," which appeared in London in 1816. There are extracts from diaries and journals of the fourteenth century down, kept by Italian, French, or English diarists.

"A Modern Utopia."

In his latest book H. G. Wells explains in the preface something of his object in writing "A Modern Utopia," which is being published by Charles Scribner's Sons:

This book is in all probability the last of a series of writings, of which—disregarding certain earlier disconnected essays—my "Anticipations" was the beginning. Originally I intended "Anticipations" to be my sole digression from my art or trade (or whatever you will) of an imaginative writer. * * * But "Anticipations" did not achieve its end. I have a slow, constructive, hesitating sort of mind, and when I emerged from that undertaking I found I had still most of my questions to state and solve. In "Mankind in the Making" (1903) I tried to reorder the social organization in a different way. I ventured upon several themes with a greater frankness than I had used in "Anticipations." * * * In this present book I have tried to settle accounts with a number of issues left over or opened up by its two predecessors, to correct them in some particulars, and to give the general picture of a "Utopia" that has grown up in my mind during the course of these speculations as a state of affairs at once possible and more desirable than the world in which I live.

Mr. Wells's books have been translated into French, German, Norwegian, Danish, Italian, Spanish, and Czech; and some have appeared simultaneously in French, German, and English. The author has had a varied career, having been a chemist, school teacher, dramatic critic, and other things. His fondness for athletics was probably inherited from his father, (who in a first-class cricket match bowled four wickets with four successive balls,) but he is not so enthusiastic since he received an injury a few years ago in a football match.

The Walking Delegate, the new labor novel, by Mr. Leroy Scott, is already attracting considerable attention. In Chicago, where people are well acquainted with strikes and the accompanying troubles and riots, The Tribune says: "There is not an intelligent employer or honest unionist who will not admit the force and truth of this tale. If all labor leaders were like 'Keating' and all contractors like 'Driscoll' the State Board of Arbitration couldn't earn its salt."

A Vigorous Protest Against Mere Cleverness in Literature—Truth and the Sneering Novelists and Essayists.

New York Times Book Review:

As an Americanised European, that is to say, a converted pessimist, I view with horror every sign of healthy minded Americans acquiring a taste for European decadence.

There are several such signs in the recent number of THE BOOK REVIEW. There is a defense of Edith Wharton's "House of Mirth"; there is an appreciation of James Huneker's latest book; there is "an inquiring, unprejudiced mind's" keen enjoyment of Henry James. Also G. Bernard Shaw is too favorably noticed for my taste. Some of those mentioned are Americans born, but Europeans by tastes and associations.

It is very natural that an "inquiring, unprejudiced mind" should enjoy Henry James. I myself read him with avidity. I did not lay down either volume of "The Golden Bowl" until it was finished. His books are fine mental gymnastics, and after him other writers seem insipid. But his cleverness is an argument against him and not for him. His books are to me like absinthe.

It is only by such scintillating brilliancy that moral views are dazzled and distorted. The youth of Europe looks up to Georg Brandes as the lowering authority on the world's literature. They call him "the Taine of the North"—a questionable compliment in my opinion. But the North, I am thankful to say, does not claim him, his real name being Maurice Cohen.

Glancing through his books casually, no longer enchained by the brilliancy of his style, one observes that all authors in whom is perceived a respect for the teachings of the Scriptures, Old or New Testament, he regularly denounces as weak, vapid, utterly worthless, while he defends all immoral literature as manly—especially the shocking literature of the so-called Romantic School in France of the early half of the nineteenth century. Still, he writes subsequent to 1850, when it was so clearly demonstrated what manliness that school had engendered in the French Nation! Here I happen on a quotation, in which he actually verifies my assertion and summarizes this view of his, referring to the period mentioned: "The charge of immorality is the invariable insult hurled by literary impotence [sic!] at everything in literature that is vigorous and virile." It is manifest that the poor man is resolutely oblivious to the fact that there is an extremely vigorous and virile and clean American literature.

Max Nordau is another of the prophets of misguided European youth, less dangerous than the former, perhaps, because more openly a renegade and scoffer.

It seems to me then that, as one who has gone through the fire, I have a right to cry "Halt!" to those who seem to flutter like moths around the flame. When I see Georg Brandes referred to in awestricken briefness as an unquestionable authority, and Max Nordau quoted in all seriousness, when he himself never seems to half mean his audacities, I shudder for the poor public. And the persons first mentioned are but followers, pupils of the same school.

All this is meant, boldly, as an argument against the merely clever in literature. Aside from their moral worthlessness, I maintain that each of the authors mentioned is worthless as authority. Each one of them is unreliable, flighty, letting his own brilliancy run away with him, sacrificing veracity and even consistency to a pretty turn of phrase.

Those who speak of Henry James as a man with a mission, a high purpose, as a prophet and seer, I beg to refer to the last portrait published of him, and also to his own explanations of "The Golden Bowl," as quoted by M. H. in your last issue. "It is only too deep and abysmal an artistic trap." "It is a real feat of engineering." A noble task, indeed, to set himself with such a subject!

And to this everlasting cry of "Truth, Truth!" I answer: By all means, let us have truth, but let the truth be taught in the home, in the schools and universities, from the pulpit and bench, by those who are selected for wisdom and seriousness: Never, never, by sneering novelists, who see only those truths which, by appearing in print, will cater to the evil found in all people and sell their books well. Truth? Is there, then, really nothing good and pure in this world, since all books which portray good people are decried by these truth seekers as hypocritical and untrue? If evil is to be treated by a novelist, then let it be by a man like Robert Grant, of trained and judicial mind, who scathes the wrongdoer in his books as he would scathe him from the bench. I could perhaps mention some other sincere novelists, on both sides of the Atlantic, who are capable of handling grave truths for the public good, particularly Feodor Dostojevski and Leo Tolstoy; but Russian truths are of no use for the American public.

Lowell's Obscure Allusions.

I.

New York Times Book Review:

Another word on the subject of Lowell's literary allusions. On one point Mr. Mott was right in his letter in THE BOOK REVIEW of May 6. The "ludicrous etymology of Antwerp" intended by Lowell is not that which I gave carelessly and glanced at. If Mr. Mott had critically looked up the plain reference contained in the passage in Lowell's review of Carlyle's "History of Frederick II. of Prussia," (which he misquoted to the extent of making a negative an affirmative,) he would have found in the first volume of Carlyle's work the following:

"Antwerp, ('At-the-Wharf,' 'On-the-Wharf,' so to speak,) against the French; which function soon fell obsolete."

I take it that here Mr. Mott and I, and probably Carlyle, were at fault, but not Lowell.

In regard to the Massachusetts gentlemen who were "tailored impromptu from the tar pot by indignant neighbors, and sent forth to illustrate the 'feathered Mercury,' as defined by Webster and Worcester," I fail to understand how any one can doubt that this is a peculiar comparison between the victims of the tarring and feathering process and the winged and therefore feathered messenger of the gods. The very first definition of the word "feathered" in Webster reads:

"Clothed, covered, or fitted with (or as with) feathers or wings; as, a feathered animal; a feathered arrow.

"'Rise from the ground like feathered Mercury.'—Shakespeare."

This, I submit, should amply justify Lowell to even the most literal minded.

I am glad that Mr. Mott does not dispute the identity of Gemo with Ganelon, the betrayer of Roland, but I must deplore his readiness to assume that Lowell used a possibly less familiar form of the name with the sinister purpose of mystifying his readers. My own judgment, too charitable it may be, is that all three forms of the name, Ganelon, Gano, and Gon, were equally familiar to Lowell, and that with the natural preference of a poet he employed the dissyllable that preserved the cadence of his sentence.

As my original arguments in defense of literary allusions in general are not disputed, it would be superfluous for me to say more on that subject.

New York Times Book Review:

If Mr. James Mott, whose list of obscure literary allusions was very interesting, but who seems unready to accept the offered solutions, will consult so concise a reference book as the Century Cyclopedia of Names for the name of Charlemagne's perfidious paladin, the world's by-word for treachery, he will find it in the three recognized forms of Ganelon, Gan, and Gano, followed by an "&c.," indicating still other forms less familiar. Most of the names of old romance that have come down through many legends and languages have several forms with similarity enough to make them recognisable. A writer may choose among them and keep in good company. As for another of Mr. Mott's puzzles, can there be much doubt that Macaulay's "lucky Valentine" was he of the name whom a fortunate chance made a royal ward and favored courtier, in contrast with his twin brother, who in a bear's den developed into the uncouth, terror-bringing "Wild Man of the Forest"?

A Letter of Carlyle's.

New York Times Book Review:

Two or three years ago, looking over some old letters, I came across an autograph by Thomas Carlyle. I have not been able to find the letter in his published correspondence; and, if it has not appeared in print, the letter has more than an autographic value, and it is clearly my duty to see that it is published. It is an interesting communication, not alone as regards the characteristic style, but on account of the nature of some of the comments.

What Carlyle, were he alive to-day, would have written concerning those Greeks of the Mongolian race, the Japanese, may be left entirely to the imagination of our numerous pro-Japanese friends. But his opinion of the Russians seems, in 1850, to have been pretty well defined, and it is curious to find Carlyle at that time championing the cause of what he designates as "the essential democracies" of Europe.

THE LETTER.

Chelsea, 20 Nov., 1850.

Dear Miss Smith:

I have read your friend Bartelmann's pamphlet and long letter, and perceive without difficulty both that he is painfully in earnest, and also that matters have fallen sadly out of square in Schleswig-Holstein lately. Something rotten in the State of Denmark, it is very clear; and also presumably some things not altogether sound in the duchies, either! I am heartily sorry to see my poor brother mortals driven to such exasperation on both sides; and, if it lay in me to do it, surely I would take no rest till I had settled them on some just basis, if such were discernible! The following points come out with decisive evidence to me from Herr Bartelmann's pleadings:

1. That Schleswig-Holstein has by the letter of the bond and by his Majesty of Denmark's marriage with the mantua-maker a decided right, as before law courts, to a "repeal of the union"; and likewise that their humor is desperately bent upon it just now. 2. That nevertheless they have, in fact, been united to Denmark for 400 years past; that law courts, with Judges in wigs, and scanning the "letter of the bond," are (unhappily or otherwise) not the tribunal where such causes are tried in this world; that the one tribunal for such is the High Court of the Universe, not sitting visibly in any place and scanning the letter, but the spirit and the eternal propriety of things, a court very difficult to plead before, whose decisions are slow, but at last irrefragable and unalterable; and that, in candid truth, the circumstance of male heritage and female heritage and of a poor royal blackguard's marrying a mantua-maker in the morganatic [sic] manner does seem a quite heavy objection to demand the disruption of a previously three hundred and four centuries' better or worse, between nations. 3. That Denmark with a view to self-preservation and continuance of best upon resisting said "repeal of the union" by whatsoever has arisen desperate fighting and slashing of throats, very intelligible to us on both sides, and very lamentable, which surely ought to end as soon as possible. 4. That Denmark during those 400 years has not taken the due method of conciliating and incorporating and honorably uniting to itself the Duchies of Schleswig-Holstein; and that, if the chance be given it again, it must with all earnestness and energy adopt and assiduously prosecute said method—or it will be the worse for Denmark. 5. That being myself a friend to "unions," an enemy to violence, quarrel, and "disruption" of all but the quite inevitable kind, and withal caring almost nothing whatever about this temporary nonsense which has arisen everywhere (in Ireland, Hungary, Bohemia, Altland, Czechland, Deutschland) concerning nationalities and mere [or more?] genealogical reasons for repeal of partnership between men or nations—I, for my own share, very much wish, and even incline to hope, that somehow or other some just pacification of Schleswig-Holstein, some "reinstatement" of the union in poor Denmark (which naturally grudges to become zero among nations) may gradually prove possible, with amended conduct on the part of Denmark in time coming.

This last is really all the practical conclusion I can arrive at just now, and I wish much Herr Bartelmann and the Holstein patriots, whose valor I respect and whose injuries I sympathise with, would look at this side of the matter, too, and try to move their strength in that direction rather. To that issue, it seems to me likeliest, things will have to come at length. To that, or else to annihilation of Denmark as a kingdom—which latter also is a result painful to contemplate to the Teutonic or any other human soul. Deutsch and Norn are first cousins, after all, are they not? Brothers German, I should say, who have unluckily got into ill-blood in times bygone! They live very nicely here in this island together, divided only by the Trent, Humber, or imaginary lines, and never dream of quarreling. As to all that of Russian or other fleets on the Baltic frightening England, (alas, our terror lies elsewhere than there at present!) or of Russia crushing down the democracy of Germany, coercing the West into "iron despotism" again, or, in fact, meddling at all with the West and its essential democracies or other interests, I confess I suffer no disturbance of mind at all; but see well that if Russia do actually meddle with those extraneous matters, Russia will get such a pounding in the mortar (all Europe joining in unutterable and unimaginable rage at such a proposal) as will bray Russia to powder or make Russia wiser for a thousand years to come.

These things are not worth to Herr Bartelmann, whose pamphlet is very bleder and tapfer, too, and whom I like very much and wish to stand well with; but do you, dear Miss Smith, write to him some appropriate synopsis of them when you next send a letter to Oldenbourg. And recommend me to Bartelmann, so far as facts will permit; and come here again some day, and let us see and hear what the world is now saying to you and you to it.

With many kind regards from my wife, I remain always, yours very sincerely,

T. CARLYLE.

Miss Branch's Poems.

New York Times Book Review:

Miss Anna Hampstead Branch's first book, "The Heart of the Road," made no widespread commotion. What will happen to the new volume, "The Shoes That Danced," does not yet appear—that is, what will happen immediately, for of its ultimate future, together with "The Heart of the Road," there can be no manner of doubt. These poems must rank in due time among the few volumes which grow venerable but never stale, are honorably placed in all libraries, and in a modest shelf of books are inevitable.

This is a new and resonant voice, not an echo of any other. For this reason it may not be at once accepted by the many, who will very likely complain of obscurity. For example, one who runs may not read "The Dreaming Man," nor "Paracelsus" either, nor Emerson's "Sphinx."

Another class of objectors may be pained by roughnesses of versification, and with reason; but there is something pleasing about a poet's refusal to be shackled by a rhyme or a question of metre. She will lead language where she likes, but it may not lead her, nor any happy or musical phrase turn her from her thought. That the effect of the whole should be so musical and finished, as well as without apparent effort, is wonderful, considering the great freedom of the technique.

One thinks of Whitman's prophetlike utterances or of Emerson's rough-shod rhymes and metres, but it is not because of similarity in technique that one calls these two great ones to mind, nor is anything so foolish as a comparison intended; only that in theirs and in this new verse is the same strangeness that is in complex music. Many poets, some of them famous and admirable, are merely performers, not composers at all. One takes up a sonnet as if it were a violin and skilfully plays upon it with other men's thoughts and phrases, and he has his reward, but his music dies with him. Other poets must have a full orchestra—all sorts of instruments playing at once, some of which you only half hear. There are many people of intelligence to whom Wagner is only a confused noise and Browning's similarly orchestrated poems a jargon.

The more important of these new poems, I suspect, have not been through the magazines. If they have I should like much to know in what periodical "The Madonna of the Earth" appeared, or "The Dreaming Man," or "Under the Trees." They do not classify with what one knows as "magazineable." And they are of such uniform fineness that the one or two which are weaker stand out conspicuously, as the one or two good ones do in most such volumes. One may smile a little at "A Political Boss" and "Shame on Thee, O Manhattan." The poet is astonished and indignant at our New York, and sometimes forgets to be medical about it. Cleanliness and grime and all conditions are so strange that there is only a rather trite but natural exclamation, of amaze. She sees the beast, and, under this guise, does not understand him, though elsewhere, treating him theoretically, she knows him to the bone.

This humanest thing in the book is also of New York, and that is: "To a New York Shop Girl Dressed for Sunday." The humanest thing, for somehow the people within these covers are shadowy. Yet that does not mean lack of reality. It is rather the unhoused souls of men and women that are dealt with, and although every-day little things may not be obscure or unimportant to her, what people hope for and dream, and do not know at all how to give expression to even in their own inner ear—these are the things with which she is concerned.

"There is a natural body and a spiritual body," it has been asserted, but today we are put in doubt about that spiritual body. The poet has been put in doubt about it, too; nevertheless it is her theme.

But between the theme of this new collection and that of the first one there is a difference, not very evident, but something as one passes from the Kyrie Eleison to the Christe Eleison in Dvorak's mass. At first the cry comes from the ground, but Christe Eleison is uttered by a man standing upright and looking at the sky.

Mediæval forms of thought and the clear-cut modern scientific way of looking at things are strangely mingled. It is synthetic.

Did not Emerson talk wistfully of the coming of a synthetic philosopher, something as John the Baptist spoke of Him who was to follow? No particular man or woman can ever be or do as Emerson, out of his desire, predicted; but a new voice such as this one means that there is a new spirit abroad, that people are thinking in a new way, a clearer and a better. There will be other poets of this order during the twentieth century, no doubt, some two or three at intervals, as there were in the nineteenth. We are never quite without our prophets, though we do not know much about them until they are dry and old upon our book shelves.

Serendipity Again.

New York Times Book Review:

It is a pleasure to receive a criticism so aptly and graciously administered as Mrs. Carleton's in THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW April 29. The writer of the criticism is further to be congratulated on the coinage of the word "serendipper," which should be welcomed to our language and allowed the same rhetorical rank accorded to its verbal ancestor of Walpole extraction.

Apropos of the criticism on my article on "Serendipity" in the April Criterion, I may perhaps be allowed a few words of defense or explanation. Although I was aware that Horace Walpole had circumscribed the use of the word serendipity to discoveries of things unsought, it seemed to me that my usage of the word was justified on three grounds. First of all, on the basis of Walpole's own words, "This discovery I made by a talisman which Mr. Chute calls the sortes Walpolianæ, by which I find everything I want," that is, everything for which he had consciously or unconsciously been seeking.

Secondly, those who read the article in The Criterion will observe that in only one of the cases which I have cited did the discovery occur when the "serendipper" was in pursuit of his quarry, but several hours, or days, subsequent to the search, when the subject had been indefinitely dismissed.

Finally, like nearly every word that loses some of its original significance or wins an increment of meaning, even the slight use which has been made of serendipity would seem to indicate a disposition on the part of writers to lengthen its etymological tether.

There are two other arguments in favor of abolishing the restriction which Walpole placed upon the use of serendipity. One is the very obvious lack in the English language of any adequate word for the sixth sense which I attempted to define in the last paragraph of the essay on serendipity. The other is the great psychical disparity—to the ear—between the spacious word serendipity and the very limited function—accidental sagacity—which it is made to cover. For, reduced to its lowest terms, accidental sagacity is nothing more nor less than open-eyed alertness, of the Sherlock Holmes order, whereas coincidental sagacity is a complex faculty of which alertness is only one factor.

However, if a quorum of discriminating authorities agree that "serendipity, pure and simple," is a faculty which can flower only in mental "dolce far niente," the minority must be resigned, though not without a passing regret, since "coincidental sagacity" wears so much becoming garment of syllabic occultness as its "accidental" brother, "Serendipity."

BOSTON NOTES.

A New Book by Sidney McCall—Chief Toma-chi-chi in Fiction—New Books and New Editions.

SIDNEY McCALL'S new book, "The Breath of the Gods," might properly have Mr. Kipling's lines on "the fool that tried to hustle the East" for its motto, for its whole burden is the impossibility of changing Japanese nature by education evolved by the Occidental mind and heart, and the hopeless futility of endeavoring to turn aside the high resolve of the Oriental intent upon his ideal of duty, patriotic or religious. The American characters are the Minister to Japan in 1904; one of his secretaries, his wife and daughter; the daughter's Japanese schoolmate, and the handsome French secretary of legation whom she loves.

By way of refreshing surprise, there is no wily, omniscient, terrifying Russian anywhere in the story, and this lack sets it apart from nearly all Asiatic fiction of recent years.

Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. will issue the book to-morrow.

Its companion will be Mr. Roger Pocock's "Curly." The Yankee's natural aversion to a useless quarrel, leads him to avoid the Irish land question as a subject of fiction, inasmuch as he knows that he cannot possibly treat it without displeasing both parties in the actual dispute, but, being English, Mr. Pocock has no such scruples, and his book is chiefly concerned with one of the cases in which the tenant's hatred of his landlord survives emigration, and causes him to follow any road that leads to vengeance.

Remembering the case of the James boys and certain other well-attested criminal cases, it does not seem prudent to deny the possibility of any of Mr. Pocock's tales of wild adventure, and no one of his humorous stories surpasses those related in Mr. Andy Adams's three books, by Mr. David Sponsiller, who does not retract one word of them even to-day, when he is a quiet resident of Colorado City. Mr. Adams's publishers—Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co.—announce the seventh printing of Miss Margaret Sherwood's "Daphne" and the third of Miss Edith Rickert's "The Reaper," and of "The Matrimonial Bureau," by Miss Carolyn Wells and Mr. Harry P. Taber.

Mrs. Mary Austin has temporarily abandoned her home in Death Valley, the friends whose strongly marked characters furnished her with so many suggestions for her first book, and her long rides, and has sought a more densely inhabited region for rest and refreshment, going to San Francisco for a fortnight, and thence to Bakersfield, where she intends to resume work.

This book differs from its author's first novel in having a serious love affair for its chief interest, although many of its chapters are as purely comic as the tale of Mrs. Jim's own courtship. The scene is one of those small towns in which nothing can be hidden, and most of the characters live in the additional light which blazes in a church and Sunday school organisation. Mrs. Jim's opportunities for arranging the love affairs of persons of differing ages are manifold, and not one does she neglect, and the curtain falls upon a village deeply interested in the question "How one may be happy though married."

The Daughters of the American Revolution have recently placed a monument above the grave of Toma-chi-chi, the Indian friend of Oglethorpe, buried in the city, that his grave might for all time defend it against his people. The chief plays an important part in "Return," the novel written by Miss MacGowan and her sister, Mrs. Cooke.

Messrs. John W. Luce & Co., being now established in their new quarters in the Rogers Building, are busily engaged in preparing a volume of "Epigrams and Aphorisms," drawn from the novels, plays, essays, and other prose of the late Oscar Wilde, and containing all that is necessary for forming a judgment of the man's best abilities. To understand his moral influence it is necessary to read all his work and to know something of his time, and current comment betrays amazing ignorance in regard to both. It is customary to talk of the cosmopolitan information forced upon the newspaper reader, but when one reads some of the criticism of the aesthetic cause in general, and Wilde in particular, one wonders if the general glare of illumination may not blind rather than enlighten.

The American Unitarian Association is this week producing the Rev. Albert Lazenby's "Tides of the Spirit," a collection of citations from the works of Martineau, with a highly interesting introduction. The quotations are arranged in eight groups, each with three or four subdivisions, and is also indexed, so that reference is easy. It is admirably bound for reference, opening easily anywhere without elaborate coaxing, and it is well and accurately printed.

Sea Story by T. Jenkins Hains.

THE BLACK BARQUE. A Tale of the Pirate Slaveship Gentle Hand on Her Last African Cruise. By T. Jenkins Hains. Illustrated by W. Herbert Dunton. Pp. 323. Boston: L. C. Page & Co. $1.50.

Even admitting that most sea yarns of the old-time variety, to which "The Black Barque," by T. Jenkins Hains, belongs, bear a confusing similarity to one another, the incidents in this one seem so particularly familiar that we are quite convinced that this is not their first appearance on the deck of the Gentle Hand, but only a reincarnation, as it were, under a fresh title. Many things may be forgotten, but scarcely anything so attractively fantastic as Mr. Hains's whim of naming—or luck in discovering—the slave ship whose last voyage to Africa is here chronicled, and then making her the scene of most of the blood-curdling events that took place on all the pirate ships that ever sailed the five oceans.

The chief impression left by this story of "The Black Barque" is that there is enough material in it to have been expanded into several books exciting enough for all practical purposes. It begins with the shanghaing of the hero at Havre, and progresses through innumerable horrors to the going down of the barque with the grimly facetious name, bow first, on the homeward voyage. The ingenuousness of the nominal narrator, who shipped as first officer at a salary of £30 a month, and awoke one day out from port to find himself a plain gunner with a good prospect of getting no salary whatever, is as funny as the name of his ship. He constantly refers to his own gentleness and refinement as compared with his roaring mates, but one looks in vain for evidence of either in his deeds. With the exception of a fellow with hands developed to preternatural proportions by having, according to his own boast, "strangled more men than there is on this ship," Mr. John Heywood, gunner, did more personal damage to neighboring flesh and bone than any one else on the Gentle Hand, and one doesn't much blame the aged but revengeful steward, Watkins, for nearly biting his ear off one day when he was in irons and could not defend himself. Watkins got even with him in several primitive but effective ways before the day when a cannon ball ripped up the deck and drove a long pine splinter through his own body with fatal results.

Of course there was on board the Gentle Hand a brave and beautiful girl, who defied bands of armed men without the quiver of an eyelid, and who was pursued by the attentions of various villainous passengers with absolutely no return emotions except scorn and raillery. When the inevitable mutiny occurred, however, and the Gentle Hand was set afire, the time seemed to have come for Mr. Heywood to win her eternal gratitude as well as her affections by deeds of daring in her behalf, but Mr. Hains did not choose to have things end in that conventional manner. Mr. Heywood didn't save Miss Allen's life, nor did he quit the sinking ship as such a hero should, but some months later, when he was commander of a coaster running general cargo to Havana, he received a mysterious letter from New York, which he is recorded as having read many times, with the result of deciding to call on the writer at the end of the return voyage. Mr. Hains doesn't say so, but imagination suggests that it was an encouraging word from the hitherto scornful Miss Allen.

In spite of its exaggerations, it is probable that one does not get from this story a very erroneous idea of slave ships, as they were in 1815. Anyway, one quite agrees with his final words concerning the men who ran just such enterprises: "They were good. They were bad. They were a mixture of the two. But they were all human. And who shall say where they have gone?"

Plunkett's "Ireland."

The new popular edition of Sir Horace Plunkett's "Ireland in the New Century," which E. P. Dutton & Co. are issuing this week, is enriched by a number of illustrations by Mr. Wallace Goldsmith, and each copy will contain an ingenious policy and application blank of the "Execrable Life Insurance Company." The application is written for "Gideon Wurdz of Charlestowne." This fixes the guilt of writing the two "Foolish" books on a resident of the Bunker Hill district, and is an ingenious parody of the ordinary form.

MAY

ERNEST RENAN.

Dr. William Barry's Way of Looking at the Author of the "Life of Jesus."*

DR. BARRY'S volume on Renan falls several points short of being satisfactory as an exposition of the reality behind the man who was an atheist, "devoutly and with a sort of unction." To tell the truth, Dr. Barry belongs to the race of biographers who by forgetting in the delight of psychic analysis the necessary more humanness of their heroes—the commonness of their day with ours—rather befog the man of their choice than realize him to the reader. Especially such biographers (and Dr. Barry) have a way of dressing up the crises of the man's mental life in a subtlety of words. They seem reluctant to reduce the reaction to plain, everyday terms.

So when Ernest Renan, born Breton peasant, imbued in early childhood with the simple faith of his kind, brought up by the Church and trained for the priesthood, begins to change to the sentimental "devout atheist," the process is invested by Dr. Barry with complexities and mistinesses which, while they may well have existed for the mind in doubt, should not be allowed to blur the student's comprehension of the real issue. In general the effect of the book is not of the presentation of a man, but of the use of a human figure to illustrate certain ideas. For instance, Renan is primarily not Renan, but the modern Abelard, the incarnation of the Celtic spirit. He is reduced (or elevated, as you please) to a type. Nevertheless the thing modern men most want to know about the author of "The Life of Jesus" is not at all what he typifies, (or may be made to typify,) racially or mentally, but what manner of man he was.

So much having been said, (less by way of criticism than by way of explanation,) it may be added that of Renan the idea (his idea of him) Dr. Barry has written some excellently readable and true things. We may lay aside as irrelevant the notion Renan incarnates the Celtic attitude of irresolution between yea and nay, we may pass over as unimportant the idealization of his processes of change from believer to unbeliever in Christian dogma, we may fail to hold with Dr. Barry where he compares Newman with Renan and insinuates (without saying so) that the Englishman's conclusion of the logical necessity of a seemingly illogical faith is the truth which the Frenchman missed by following what he thought severe logical processes. For all these are matters of widely divided opinion. Few of us, however, will dispute the value of Dr. Barry's summing up of the real significance of the famous "Life of Jesus," published in June, 1863, a world scandal in a few weeks, and sold to the extent of sixty-five thousand copies by November. "On all sides men looked upon the volume as a banner lifted up, which must be attacked or defended."

What, then, had Renan achieved? Something great, if not portentous. Thanks to his unrivaled command of language to the color of his description, to the suavity of a sentimentalism which enchanted without rhetoric, he had transformed the Gospels into a publication of the day. * * * The "Hebrew truth," to speak with St. Jerome, had been softened down to an idyl, which was not truly Eastern, but which corresponded to the decadent mood of "Paul and Virginia," and was sometimes more than a little cloying in its oversweetness.

That which was instantly admired and which alone will not be forgotten in the "Life of Jesus," was the Galilean episode. The landscape gave birth to the character, not any well-interpreted documents. But again the character may be traced in Renan's own history, with its varying stages; Brittany is the key to Nazareth, Paris shadows forth Jerusalem. By "gently soliciting" the inspired text * * * Renan put together, in mosaic fashion, a sentimental romance which was colored from end to end by his own experience.

Thereafter Dr. Barry quotes contemporary commentators. Carlyle "disliked the book and wished it had not been written." "Das ist nichts," said German Tholuck. "Ewald and Keim were severe upon this romance 'which professed to deal with great questions, but which answered none.'" Mommsen, on the other hand, said Renan was "a savant in spite of his beautiful style."

So Dr. Barry proceeds to explain the Renanian performance:

> When the Romans besieged an enemy's city they called on its tutelar gods to leave it and follow them to the Capital. This unhappy fugitive from the Christian altar was busy with a like incantation. He desired to make the Prophet of Nazareth an idealist who had set him the example, a free spirit in revolt against the hierarchy. The cause of Jesus was to be severed from that of the Church and to be identified with revolution. * * * The supernatural would be vanquished if Jesus were left in his enemies' keeping. But rebels have never known how to deal with a captive King, except to make way with him, and so it proved now.

The writer makes the meaning of this somewhat dark saying clearer by another passage:

> From a scandal so arresting, and of such proportions, which has been perpetuated in thirty-three editions at home, with translations and cheap issues in every European language, one result, hardly anticipated by its author, is becoming daily more evident. The "Life of Jesus," passing from technical theology, from catechisms and sermons, into literature, vindicates to itself an importance as the first, in every sense, of human biographies, and the centre of history. Between sacred and profane, the old wall of division has been broken down. It is impossible for any man to explain the world without fixing his regard on Jesus. He is real to the present generation, even to those who do not believe, as He never was to the Voltairian or freethinker of a previous age. Theologians conquered in a more vivid fashion than ever before that creeds and dogmas are but aspects of His words, His works, His personality. Critics know that they have to deal with Him as a fact.

Naturally Dr. Barry descends sometimes from sermonizing on the text "Renan" to narrative. He tells something of the life of the peasant lad who was born at Tréguier in 1823, of what he learned from the good fathers in that town, of his student life in Paris, at Issy, and St. Sulpice, of the loyal help and brave advice given him by his sister Henriette, of his giving up the priestly life after taking the tonsure, of his travels in Italy and Syria, of the public scandal of his first lecture when he assumed the Chair of Hebrew in the Collège de France in 1862, of his further travels and his later life in Paris, lived like the rest of his life "in a mental intoxication." "The renegade of St. Sulpice," says Dr. Barry, "was now a somewhat worldly minded man, or as a witty friend called him, 'the dandy of the exegesis,' compelled to look on while Paris was burning."

We need not here follow Dr. Barry in his remarks upon Renanism as expressed in the "St. Paul," (1869;) "The Anti-Christ," (who is Nero,) published in 1873; the "Reminiscences of Youth," (1883;) "Philosophic Dramas," (1886,) and the "History of Israel," (1888.)

Renan was elected to the French Academy in 1878, making upon that occasion an address after his best manner. He died in 1892.

An Irish Lad's Romance.

SANDY. By Alice Hegan Rice. 16mo. New York: The Century Company. $1.

Sandy is Mrs. Rice's first venture into the field of real novel writing, and the book possesses much of the wholesome sweetness of her two earlier volumes. Sandy was Irish in everything but name. "He had a smile that waited for an answer and usually got it—a smile so brimming over with good-fellowship and confidence that it made a lover of a friend and a friend of an enemy."

As a stowaway he boarded an American liner and might have found safe and undiscovered passage in one of its lifeboats but for a sudden excess of patriotic zeal for the land of his adoption when the big American vessel won in a friendly race with an English liner. However, all things are for the best in the story of Sandy, and had he not been discovered and cast into the steerage in disgrace Ruth Nelson would undoubtedly never have thrown the golden orange down from the first cabin deck and Sandy might have finished his life in an altogether different manner. As it was Sandy ate the orange and developed a deep love for the giver—so deep that when he watched her leave the vessel and saw her name "Ruth Nelson, Kentucky, U. S. A.," on her bag he at once renounced his intention of becoming a doctor and joined forces with Ricks Wilson, an unlikely looking young person, but who "possessed unlimited knowledge of all things terrestrial, from the easiest way of making a fortune to the best way of spending it." After that Sandy's course is the usually unexpected one of young novel heroes.

There is no denying Mrs. Rice's pleasant manner of telling a story. Here is an account of Sandy and Ruth's wedding:

> Sandy looked joyously out across the fields of waving blue grass to the shining river. In quick flashes the scenes of his boyhood came before him. * * *
> "Fore de Lawd, Mist' Sandy, ef you ain't fergit yer necktie!".
> It was Aunt Melvy who burst in upon his reverie with these ominous words. * * * Sandy's hand flew to his neck. "It's at the farm," he cried in great excitement, "wrapped in tissue paper in the top drawer. Send Jim, or Joe, or Nick—any of the darkies you can find!"
> * * * Messengers were sent in hot haste, one to the farm and one to town, while Jimmy Reed was detailed to canvass the guests and see if a white four-in-hand might be procured.
> "The nearest thing is Mr. Meech's," he reported on his fourth trip upstairs; it's a white linen string tie, but he doesn't want to take it off."
> "Faith, and he'll have to," said Sandy in great agitation. "Don't he know that nobody will be looking at him?" * * *
> The bridal march had sounded many times, and the impatient guests were becoming seriously concerned when a handkerchief fluttered from the landing and Sandy and Ruth came down the wide steps together. Mr. Meech cleared his throat, and, with one hand nervously fidgeting under his coat tails, the other thrust into the bosom of his coat, he began: * * *
> Suddenly a loud shout sounded from the upper hall, followed by sounds like the repeated fall of a heavy body. * * *. Then through the stillness rang out a hallelujah from above. "Praise de Lawd, de fight's done come! De darkness, lak de thunder, done roll away. I'se saved at last, and my name is done written in de Promised Land! Amen! Praise de Lawd! Amen!" To part of the company at least the situation was clear. Aunt Melvy, after seeking religion for nearly sixty years, had chosen this inopportune time to "come through." She was with some difficulty removed to the washhouse, where she continued her thanksgiving in undisturbed exultation.

A Practical Book on Printing.

PRINTING. A Practical Treatise on the Art of Typography as Applied More Particularly to the Printing of Books. By Charles Thomas Jacobi. Illustrations. Cloth, 8vo. Pp. xxiii.-409. New York: The Macmillan Company.

Mr. Charles T. Jacobi, managing Director of the Chiswick Press, and lately Examiner in Typography to the City and Guilds of London Institute, has found time to prepare many books on the subject of printing; and one of these, in a third revised and enlarged edition, has recently been issued. It deals with printing, especially book printing, and is a wonderfully compact manual, which might well be as useful here as in England.

The completeness of the book will be apparent from a brief list of its chapters, which number thirty-five. They are in seven divisions, and deal with typefounding, composition, (thirteen chapters,) proofreading, handpress work, (six chapters,) illustrated and color work, motive power, machine printing, (six chapters,) and warehouse work (four chapters.) Two supplementary chapters give questions in typography set in the examinations at Mr. Jacobi's school, and others set to applicants for clerkships in His Majesty's Stationery Office. There is also a glossarial index of terms used in printing, and a collection of samples of printing paper.

Just eighty years ago another master printer, John Johnson of London, issued "Typographia; or, The Printer's Instructor." It was in two volumes, dedicated to the members of the Roxburghe Club, and bound appropriately in Roxburghe style. The first volume related the history of printing—"The Origin, Rise, and Progress of the Typographic Art"—and gives full accounts of Caxton and Wynkyn de Worde, with lists of the 64 books known to have been printed by the former and of the 410 printed by the latter. It gives also lists of Pynson's publications and the names and works of the other early English printers. Volume II. describes the mechanical side of printing almost as fully as Mr. Jacobi does in his more recent book. In some respects "J. Johnson, Printer," is even fuller than his successor, for he gives King Solomon's original Hebrew alphabet, as well as that later invented by Esdras! He discusses other alphabets, going back, as he says, "to the antediluvian Hebrew" for the foundation of his essay! Evidently Mr. Johnson was an antiquary. It is plain that "Typographia" inspired Mr. Jacobi; for he follows Johnson's order of subjects, and, allowing for changed conditions, treats them in much the same manner.

Harper's Magazine for June.

The June Harper's contains the first chapters of Booth Tarkington's serial of the Indiana country, (already announced in THE BOOK REVIEW.) "The Conquest of Canaan," with shorter stories by Marie Manning, Arthur Colton, Abby Meguire Roach, Charles Moreau Harges, Marie Van Vorst, Jennette Lee, Margaret Cameron, Annie Hamilton Donnell, and W. D. Nesbit. W. D. Howells has in this number an account (accompanied by illustrations in color) of his adventures with English lodgings in London, and his rambles about town in the London parks, churches, markets, and slums. Mr. Howells says, by the way, that the English poor children "have the dirtiest faces in the world." There is also a sort of reply to John Burroughs's article in the February Harper's by "Peter Rabbitt," said to be a very learned scientific animal, and proof in his proper person that the "mental powers" of animals are not as Anthony Hope says, "despicable." Edmund Gosse writes about "Elizabethan Flower Gardens," and President Hadley of Yale on "Mental Types and Their Recognition in Our Schools"—the modern doctrine of fitting the education to the pupil to be educated instead of the pupil to be educated to the education. Yet another article by Charles Wellington Furlong tells about the "burial place" of the famous American frigate Philadelphia, blown up by Decatur at Tripoli, while Dr. C. W. Saleeby provides some plain, blunt facts about the back of knowledge of the brain and its workings.

Illustrations—fifty-three in number, fourteen of these in color—include work by Henry Wolf, Alice Barber Stephens, Elizabeth Shippen Green, Lucius Hitchcock, and others.

"The American Nation."

The Harpers announce that they will publish during the Summer, beginning with June, one more volume each month of their "The American Nation—A History," edited by Albert Bushnell Hart. Five volumes of this monumental work issued during the Winter were reviewed at the time in THE BOOK REVIEW. The sixth volume, which will appear next month, is the work of Evarts B. Greene, Professor of History in the Illinois State University, and deals with "Provincial America"; that is, the conditions of the colonies and the colonists from 1690 onward to the beginning of the French and Indian wars, when the scattered settlements along the Atlantic Coast first began to draw together in a common interest. The frontispiece is a portrait of Franklin, who may be called the first American in any wide sense. This sixth volume, with the others which follow it, will be issued in two shapes—an edition uniform with the set of five published last Winter, and another "University Edition," uniform with the separate volumes in which the set of five was later reissued for the use of colleges.

The June Bazar.

In the June number of Harper's Bazar Margaret Deland has some observations in her familiar manner "concerning saints," wherein she notes particularly that overdevelopment of unselfishness which is the highest form of selfishness. "The Reddy Baby," by Juliet Wilbor Tompkins, is an "amusing record of happenings during the nurse's afternoon out." In the same number, James Huneker has a paper on "Bernard Shaw and Women." Mr. Huneker asserts that Mr. Shaw is the man who "discovered and popularized the Unpleasant Girl." Mrs. Mary E. Wilkins Freeman's serial, "The Debtor," is continued, and there are illustrated articles on "The Chicago Woman's Athletic Club" and "Among the Illustrators," besides shorter papers. The papers which deal with fashions are as entrancing as usual and very appropriately concern themselves with June brides and the Summer girl's armament.

An Elementary Algebra.

Walter R. Marsh of the Pingry School, Elizabeth, N. J., has prepared an "Elementary Algebra," which is about to come from the press of Charles Scribner's Sons in the Marsh and Ashton Mathematical Series. It is to be followed by a "College Algebra," "Plane and Solid Geometry," "Plane and Solid Analytic Geometry," &c.

As Mr. Marsh points out in his preface, the volume contains a discussion of the fundamental principles of algebra. The scheme of the text is to illustrate the meaning of a principle by carefully selected exercises, every principle being followed by a group of examples. These examples have been prepared to illustrate various principles dealt with in the text. The subject-matter of the text follows the requirements for the College Entrance Examination Board. The subjects treated of include equations and problems, graphs, graphs of equations, progressions, permutations and combinations, quotients used in physics, &c.

A DUTCH SETTLER.

HARM JAN HUIDEKOPER. By Miss Moore Tiffany and Francis Tiffany. With an Appendix by Alfred Huidekoper and a Huidekoper Genealogy Prepared by Frederic Wolters Huidekoper and Frederic Louis Huidekoper. Pp. 388. Boston: The W. B. Clarke Company.

Harm Jan Huidekoper was a young Hollander, a member of an old family that includes a noble branch, and has furnished the Netherlands with high public officials and other men of prominence, who moved to this country in 1796 and gradually rose to considerable wealth. But of more importance to the estimate of his importance in our history is the fact that he was one of the founders of American Unitarianism, and a close friend of such men as William Henry Channing and James Freeman Clarke. The latter married one of his daughters, Anne. His son Frederic was the founder and first head of the Meadville Theological School, an institution which still continues to have great influence in liberal religious circles. Among his living grandchildren may be mentioned Gen. Henry Shippen Huidekoper, once Postmaster of Philadelphia. To the teeming multitudes that constitute the population of our present-day Republic the man's name is hardly even known. Yet he labored faithfully and well, was instrumental in the developing of vast regions that now are counted among the most prosperous in the land, and helped to establish institutions that continue to be useful in the never-ending upward struggle of mankind. And his biographers are able to say of him, although he had been dead since 1854, that "he is still a vital influence in the community where he was revered and loved." As agent for the Holland Land Company, an association of Dutch capitalists that owned 1,500,000 acres of land in New York State (including the entire site of the present City of Buffalo) and 500,000 acres in Western Pennsylvania, he had intimate and praiseworthy connection with the work of building up the region west of the Alleghanies.

Much of the material embodied in this volume has been drawn from an autobiography prepared by Huidekoper for the benefit of his grandchildren, which contains highly interesting details in regard to the conditions and appearance of this country at the end of the eighteenth century. That was in the days when Trenton, N. Y., was known as Oldenbarneveld and as the home of Dr. Francis Adrian van der Kemp, a friend of Huidekoper, of John Adams, and of De Witt Clinton, whose life work consisted in the translation of the records of the Dutch West India Company, owned by the State of New York. Buffalo was a pretty village, and Pittsburg an insignificant town where the traveling Huidekoper witnessed the abortive attempt of two Frenchmen to establish a shipyard for the building of ocean-going ships. Of New York City, young Huidekoper writes in his letters home:

"The pigs and cows running about the streets first disgusted me, and the more I saw of the town the more I realised its inferiority to the majority of our Dutch cities. Even the fashionable promenade of the Battery, of which one hears so much, has nothing to boast of except the view over Staten Island and the river."

Huidekoper was a close friend of Capt. Perry, too, and an eye-witness of that famous commander's struggle to fit out the little fleet that afterward took part in the battle of Lake Erie. The book is full of instructive and charming reminiscences of those early days, as well as of later ones, when Brook Farm existed and provoked the otherwise tolerant Huidekoper into referring to it as "a hospital of invalids."

The Duties of a Citizen.

CITIZENSHIP AND THE DUTIES OF A CITIZEN. Ethics for the Young. For Use in the School and the Home. By Walter L. Sheldon. 12mo, cloth. Pp. 406. Chicago: W. M. Welch Company. Price, $1.25.

This book aims to teach the young how to apply the fundamental principles of right and wrong to the problems of citizenship and the State. Each chapter is written in the form of a dialogue in which the teacher appears to converse in easy language with his scholars, pointing out the meaning and beauties of some poetical and prose selection dealing with the different elements of patriotism and National life. In addition to these dialogues, more elaborate selections are appended, including portions from the best speeches and writings of Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, Hamilton, Everett, Webster, Ruskin, Clay, Horace Mann, Charles J. Fox, John Bright, and Pericles.

In his advice to instructors, the author gives this helpful suggestion, which is well worth remembering:

Do not talk too much about the words "citizenship" or "love of country." There is always a danger of making valuable words or phrases commonplace by oft repetition. Our purpose is to build up a mass of sentiment or feeling in the minds of the young with regard to citizenship itself. It is the sense of duty in this relationship which we should work upon without definitely talking too much about duty.

Muhammad and His Faith.

Arthur N. Wollaston, C. I. E., has revised and enlarged his book, "Half Hours with Muhammad," which appeared some years ago and is now out of print. The name has also been changed to "The Sword of Islam," and E. P. Dutton & Co. are bringing the new edition out here. It has been written more for the general reader than the scholar; the subject has been treated of, the author writes in his preface, in a way suitable for "general" information. He adds:

At a time when the East, with its bright imagery and ever-varying romance, is gradually arousing the attention of the less emotional West, it has been thought advisable to enter the lists with an endeavor to awaken interest in the history of a religion and its followers—no inconsiderable number of whom bow the knee of submission to the Emperor of India. For nearly half a century destiny has linked me with the East, and I shall be more than repaid for any labor bestowed on the present volume if, haply, readers of the hour cast an eye of favor upon a work the interest of which centres in Eastern lands and Eastern peoples.

The book deals with the history of Arabia before the time of Muhammad, the time of the Prophet, the Omayyad and Abbaside Dynasties of Khalifs, the Crusades, the Sultans of Turkey, the pilgrimage to Mecca, the Sunnis, Shias, and minor sects of the Muhammadan religion, &c. There are several illustrations from photographs of places of interest in Turkey, Arabia, Palestine, and elsewhere.

Col. McClure's "Presidents."

Col. A. K. McClure's "Our Presidents, and How We Make Them," will be republished shortly by the Harpers in a new edition revised and brought down to date by the author so as to include in clear and concise form the chief features of the recent Roosevelt-Parker campaign. Col. McClure's book is already pretty well known; his journalistic and literary experience of more than fifty years has furnished him with a wealth of first-hand material about Presidents and Presidential candidates. The present edition of his book is introduced with a preface by ex-Postmaster General Charles Emory Smith and contains portraits of the Presidents.

Hebrew Narratives.

The second volume in "The Students' Old Testament," which Charles Scribner's Sons have in active preparation, by Prof. Charles F. Kent, deals with "The History of Israel's Historical and Biographical Narratives." It includes all the direct Biblical sources for Hebrew history from the establishment of the monarchy under Saul to the end of the Maccabean struggles, chronological charts, historical maps, and an appendix containing a translation of the most important historical inscriptions which throw light upon Israel's history. This affords a manual for the study of the old Hebrew political, social, and religious life not only for Old Testament students, but also for the general reader interested in the subject. Prof. Kent writes in his introduction on "the origin and present literary form of the narratives":

Viewed as literature, the historical and biographical narratives as a whole constitute an exceedingly attractive and important department of the Old Testament literary. They are complete, with a unique portrayal of the characters of the principal persons, and many scenes are described with great vividness and power. Their lamentations, popular traditions, didactic stories, and historical romances are all represented. Viewed as the record of nine centuries of Israel's national experiences, they are unique among the writings of antiquity because of the relative completeness and exactness of the picture which they represent. * * * Above all, these Old Testament narratives at every point call attention to the divine guidance and purpose which molded Israel's history.

"Mythology of the British Islands."

We have made in this volume some attempt to draw a picture of the ancient religion of our earliest ancestors, the Gaelic and the British Celts. We have shown what can be gathered of the broken remnants of a mythology as splendid in conception and as brilliant in color as that of the Greeks. We have tried to paint its divine figures and to retell their heroic stories. We have seen them fall from their shrines, and yet, rising again, take on new lives as Kings, or saints, or knights of romance, and we have caught fading glimpses of them surviving to-day as the "fairies," their rites still cherished by worshippers who hardly know whom or why they worship. Of necessity this survey has been brief and incomplete. Whether the great edifice of the Celtic mythology will ever be wholly restored one can at present only speculate. Its colossal fragments are perhaps too deeply buried and too widely scattered. But, even as it stands, ruined, it is a mighty quarry from which poets yet unborn will hew spiritual marble for houses not made with hands.

Thus writes Charles Squire in his summary chapter to the introduction of Celtic myth, legend, poetry, and romance, which Charles Scribner's Sons are importing. The volume is believed to be the first attempt made to acquaint the English reader with the subject. The author deals with the ancient Britons, the Gaelic gods and their stories, the British gods, Finn and his Fenians, Arthur and his knights, and other celebrities of Celtic legend and romance. It is his aim to provide a book for those acquainted with Greek, Roman, and Scandinavian mythology which treats of a nearer source of poetry. References and explanations are given in footnotes.

"A Twentieth Century Idealist."

This novel, by Henry Pettit, is probably an attempt to write biography in the form of fiction. It is an introspective, retrospective, meditative, idealistic tale, the scenes laid in the Orient. The heroine, who "loves and seeks the truth for its own sake," is a young and charming girl. She has her own ideas of the "true" faith, and tells them to those who argue with her. Adele Cultus, her parents, and her friend, join two gentlemen in a trip to the Orient. Paul Warder falls in love with the heroine. Together they visit the many interesting places, and finally come to understand each other very well.

The book is the result of travels around the world, eastward and westward, by Mr. Pettit. He has compiled, as an amateur, about forty volumes of notes of travel, dealing particularly with scenery and music. He is a retired civil engineer and architect. He is a native of Philadelphia; his great-grandfathers were Col. Charles Pettit, a member of the Continental Congress, and Chief Justice Thomas McKean, a signer of the Declaration of Independence.

There are two illustrations in the book artistically reproduced from photographs by the author. One is a view from a pinnacle on the roof of a cathedral among the Himalayas, showing the Delectable Mountains beyond; the other shows the Kunchingunga Snowy range, from the Observatory Hill at Darjeeling. "A Twentieth Century Idealist" bears the imprint of The Grafton Press.

Carter Goodloe.

The author of "At the Foot of the Rockies," which Charles Scribner's Sons are publishing, Miss Carter Goodloe, is the daughter of a well-known lawyer of Louisville, Ky., where she was born. She is a graduate of Wellesley College, and was the youngest woman who had taken her degree at that institution up to that time. She then studied in Paris for several years. The girls' college stories she has written at various times within the past two years for the magazines will be brought out in book form in the Autumn by the Scribners.

The Sun.

An Admirable Detective Story.

All the requirements for a first class detective tale are more than met by Mr. Fred M. White's "The Crimson Blind" (R. F. Fenno & Co.) It is by no means a short story, but the reader will read it breathlessly to the end. He is plunged at once into a mystery, as he should be in every well constructed tale of the sort, and is led rapidly out of one complication into another, enough being explained to satisfy his mind for the moment, but more remaining unaccounted for till he has read further.

There is little of preternatural wisdom in the tale; what knowledge is obtained comes naturally enough. The villain has no redeeming trait and is bad enough to satisfy the most exacting. The play between his moves and those of his detectives is kept in suspense skilfully.

TO secure attention to this department every communication must be signed with the full name and address of the inquirer, which will not be published unless the inquirer so desires. Trivial questions will not be heeded. Queries will be answered in the order of their receipt, and as the number received weekly is very large and the pressure upon our columns is always very great, inquirers must always be prepared to await their turn.

"W.," Burlington, Vt.: "What States took the lead, and when, in abolishing imprisonment for debt, except in cases of fraud, in this country? The Washington National Intelligencer of Aug. 15, 1827, says the legislature of North Carolina on this subject. In 1822, 'puts to shame the barbarous policy which prevails in almost all the States of the Union, and even lingers on the statute book of the General Government. We are glad to perceive, however, that public attention is awake to the subject. It was the custom in North Carolina for many years to confine a debtor within 'prison bounds,' on bond, for twenty days previous to his taking the oath of insolvency. (2) What is the value of 'Narrative of the Transactions Relative to the Capture of the American Ship Olive Branch,' published in Philadelphia in 1804, without title page, according to Gilman's Bibliography of Vermont, by Gen. Ira Allen?"

(1) We do not know what State actually took the lead in abolishing imprisonment for debt except for fraud; but in a speech before the United States Senate on Jan. 14, 1822, Col. Richard Mentor Johnson, a Senator from Kentucky, said that Kentucky had abolished the system, and he understood that Missouri and North Carolina had also done so. (2) The two volumes, absolutely complete, sold for $44 in 1899; Volume II. alone has sold for from $6.50 to $12.50.

Mrs. OSCAR W. NOBLE, Waterbury, Conn.: "I would like to know where I can procure a copy of the English translation of the old German fairy tale, 'Nutcracker and Mouse King.' There are some extracts from the story in the Warner Library of the World's Best Literature, but as I cannot commit that at this writing, not having the volumes at hand, I do not remember the author's name."

The author was E. T. W. Hoffmann; you will find the story in "The Seraphon Brethren," which is published in the Bohn Libraries, and sold here by the Macmillan Company.

"S. D. S.," 1,463 Lexington Avenue, New York City: "Kindly inform me as to the value of Mark Akenside's poetical works, consisting of 'The Pleasures of the Imagination' and 'The Virtuoso.' The book bears the date of 1806, and was published by W. Suttaby & C. Corrall, 38 Charing Cross, London. To whom does Burns in his 'Cotter's Saturday Night' refer in the following lines:

'Or how the royal bard did groaning lie
Beneath the stroke of Heaven's avenging ire.'"

(1) This has no quotable value. (2) To David, the Poet-King of Israel.

R. L. C. WHITE, Nashville, Tenn.: "The lines quoted by E. M., on April 22—

'To-morrow, didst thou say?
Methought I heard Horatio say, To-morrow'— are the beginning of a poem entitled 'To-morrow,' by Dr. Nathaniel Cotton. They were originally printed in a volume called 'Various Pieces in Verse and Prose,' published in London in the latter part of the eighteenth century. There is a copy of Cotton's poems, in two volumes, in the Astor Library at your city. Dr. Cotton was the physician of the poet Cowper, who speaks very highly of him in one of his letters."

"EMMELINE K.," 429 Park Avenue, New York City: "In your answer to W. O. Gibson, Washington, D. C., printed last Saturday, you fail to mention Gustav Freytag's 'Technique of the Drama,' translated from the German by Elias J. MacEwan, and published by S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago. It is certainly one of the foremost works on that subject."

"M. H. B.," Essex Falls, N. J.: "In Pepys's Diary, under date of March 26, 1664, is this note: 'This morning in discourse Sir W. Rider (said) that he hath kept a journall of his life for almost these forty years, even to this day and still do, which pleases me mightily.' Sir W. Rider was important enough to be Master of Trinity House, and his journal or diary, if found, could hardly fail to be both interesting and important. Has anything been heard of it since Pepys's time?"

Rider was important enough to be Master of Trinity House, it is true; but he was not otherwise prominent; besides, the Master was chosen in rotation, by seniority; so it required merely a long life to get to the Mastership. Rider is not in the Dictionary of National Biography, and his journal is unknown. It may still exist, however.

"Evelyn C.," 66 East One Hundred and Thirtieth Street, New York City: "Can any reader of this department give me the words of a poem which treats of training in a raw recruit, the first line of which is: 'Said Sergeant Madden to Private McFadden'?"

This is Robert W. Chambers's poem "The Recruit." You will find it in "The World's Best Poetry," Volume IX., Page 321.

J. E. B. McCready, Charlottetown, P. E. I.: "I inclose a copy of the poem for which J. M. Parker asked recently, beginning: 'Early, early in the Spring.'"

The poem has been forwarded to Miss Parker.

"E. C. L.," Plainfield, N. J.: "In what poem and of whom did Lowell write:

'His greatness not so much in genius lies
As in adroitness when occasions rise.
Lifelong convictions to extemporize'?"

We do not find these lines among Lowell's collected poems.

SHAS TUTTLE, 421 Clinton Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.: "I inclose a song, 'Liberty Tree,' which I learned from my father, who said it was used in Revolutionary times. Can you or your readers tell me who the author was? It certainly is a curiosity worth preserving. The first stanza runs thus:

'In a chariot of light from the regions of day,
The fair Goddess of Liberty came,
Ten thousand celestials illumined the way,
And order conducted the Dame.'"

This is Thomas Paine's "Liberty Tree," published in The Pennsylvania Magazine

"J. F. B.," Shenefield, N. J.: "I am desirous of taking up the study of engineering, and shall esteem it a courtesy if you will tell me as to what books you would advise me to procure. I desire to go into the subject very thoroughly from the beginning, as it is with a view to tracing the course of railroads from the earliest period at which we have any record."

We suggest that you get the "Historians' History of the World," which is really an excellently edited and useful anthology of history. Read it, or as much of it as you choose, and consult the bibliographies which are printed in the back of each volume. You will then see what others have done along the line you mark for yourself.

E. D. HUTCHINSON, Elizabeth, N. J.: "I have what I believe to be a copy of the first edition of The New York Sun. It is numbered No. 1, dated Tuesday, Sept. 3, 1833, published at 222 William Street, and printed by Benjamin H. Day. Would you kindly advise me if this is of the first edition, and what value, if any, would be placed on same?"

There is no quotable value on it, even if it be a copy of the first number. If the dates on the first and second pages agree, or if a figure of the latter is defaced, you have a copy of the fac similie issued in 1833.

ANNIE POWERS, Washington, West Va.: "I have been replying to some of your queries, so while my hand is in I shall ask a few myself. I, too, boast of having studied McGuffey's Readers. In the fifth of the series I find a lesson entitled 'The Knave Unmasked,' a drama, the scene of which is in a camp before Florence. It is signed Shakespeare. Now, I have several copies of editions of his works, but I find this in none of them. Why is this?

Evidently this was Mr. McGuffey's name for the scene in "All's Well That Ends Well," in which Parolles is hoaxed into believing that he has been caught by the enemy and compelled to confess his cowardice and knavery. See "All's Well," Act III., Scene 6, and Act IV., Scene 1 and Scene 3.

Mrs. H. C. STERN, Alameda, Cal.: "In the issue of April 22 'T. A. D.' 1,131 Eighty-third Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., asks if Mrs. Sigourney's 'Hymn of Faith,' which the inquirer quotes from, has ever been published. It was published in a newspaper in 1864. I have forwarded a copy of it, taken from one of our ancient scrapbooks, to 'T. A. D.'"

"H. H. B.," Flatbush Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Will you please tell me where I can find the original, ancient Scottish ballad from which Burns took the story of his 'Macpherson's Farewell'? Carlyle refers to it in one of his letters to Edward FitzGerald.

Except the chorus and one stanza, the entire ballad is Burns's own. The original may be in Aytoun's "Ballads of Scotland" or Chambers's "Popular Rhymes of Scotland."

Appeals to Readers.

ANNIE POWERS, Washington, Va.: "In a letter lost by a Michigan soldier, and later in my possession, were these lines:

"'The camps on the road
Shall not be their abode,
But as oft as the trumpet shall blow.
Then glad of a chance
For a further advance,
They must take up their knapsacks and go.'

"In a school rhetoric I find these:

"'One more new claimant for human fraternity,
Swelling the ranks that move on to eternity.
I, who have filled the cup, tremble to think
Of it,
For be it what it may, yet I must drink of it.'

"I should like to know something of both of these quotations."

"GLENDOWER," The Woodley, Washington, D. C.: "I shall be grateful if you can trace these lines, which I quote from memory:

* * * "For life to me is as a station,
A part in which a traveler stands,
And waits amid the chill and gloom
In foreign lands, away from home and kindred,
And as he listens in the distance hears the train for home."

Mrs. O. F. CHARLES, Washington, D. C.: "Where can I find the following quotation:

"'As when at twelve o'clock,
Strong January opes the gates of life,
And we that were so cabined and so dark
Within the round tower of the rounded year
Feel the far Spring blown in on us, and look Straight to the primroses'?"

Mrs. E. A. BABCOCK, Ithaca, N. Y.: "Can any of your readers inform me where I can find a bit of poetry the first verse of which is as follows:

"'Come gather closer to my side,
My little smitten flock,
And I will tell of Him who drew
Pure water from the rock'?"

JESSUP SALISBURY, South Orange, N. J.: "Can you give the source of 'I love him for his faults no less than for his virtue'? I can find many quotations of like import, but none where the wording follows that in the above, which I believe to be authentic."

"E. K.," 429 Park Avenue, New York City: "Could you help me to get the parody on 'The Psalm of Life' entitled 'The Lay of the Sluggard,' beginning:

"'Tell me not in caustic numbers
Early rising makes us men,
That the man's a fool who slumbers
Sweetly on till half-past ten'?"

M. CLEERY, Schenectady, N. Y.: "Can any one give the title and the author of a little poem which ends each verse something like this: "The dear little heads in the pew'?"

MRS. OSCAR W. NOBLE, Waterbury, Conn.: "I would like to know the rest of the poem—one of Weatherly's songs, I think—of which this is a verse:

"'Baby is gone to the golden weather
Over the far-off mountain's brow;
We two walk on through the mists together;
We have only each other now.
Put your hands into mine and pray, dear;
Pray that soon the morning will break.
And God will hear us and show us the way, dear,
Safe into heaven, for baby's sake.'"

W. H. AMES, Carlisle, Penn.: "(a) Can any of your readers kindly tell me where I may find the Delsarte motion song the first line of which is: 'We are sailing to dreamland, baby and I'? (b) I also greatly desire to locate an old Sunday school tract called 'Little Jessie Hume; or, The Life and Death of Two Little Ladies Continued.'"

ROME.

Its History During the Later Republic and the Early Principate.*

THERE are two kinds of historical writing. The first is inexact and readable; the second, exact and unreadable. Once in a while, however, an English historian appears who strikes the golden mean. Such a writer is Dr. Greenidge, the author of a history of Rome during the later republic and the early principate, the first volume of which has just appeared.

It may be said at once that Dr. Greenidge revivifies Rome, which had been reduced to the deadness of classicality. He recreates the Eternal City in the sixth century of its existence, and with exactness and grace shows us its life, its politics, the causes of its troubles, how it met them, and what the final issue was.

The first volume of the six volumes in which Dr. Greenidge plans to compress his history covers some twenty-nine years, from the time of Tiberius Gracchus to the Consulship of Marius, B. C. 133 to 104—more correctly, A. U. C. 620 to A. U. C. 649, for the Romans, strange as it may seem to us, did not count their years backward. In that short period occurred the two agrarian movements, led by Tiberius Gracchus and, ten years later, by Caius Gracchus, and the Jugurthine war. The turning point in the history of the republic was reached when Tiberius was slain; thereafter everything tended to a monarchy, which was reached nearly a century later, when Caesar became dictator for ten years.

When Tiberius Gracchus became Tribune, B. C. 133, the city had got beyond the simplicity of its early days in everything except name. It still had Consuls, Tribunes, a Censor of Morals. The first named were the Chief Magistrates; the second were still the guardians of the rights of the poor, but though thirty years earlier the people would hastily put out their lights when it was whispered that the Censor Tiberius Sempronius Gracchus was passing through the streets, in B. C. 183 the Censor had become more historical than useful, though the people admired a stern official as an ornament to a famous list. The city had grown wealthy; it had become the home of the wealthy classes, while the country had become merely a place of refreshment, when business and ordinary pleasures were suspended. Property in the city had increased in value, as much so "skyscrapers" were built, and the poorer nobility had to live in flats. Vast "islands" or flat houses were built and let out in floors or rooms to those who wished or had to stay "in town," but could not afford whole houses to themselves. The separate houses were larger than formerly.

Meantime the Senators had entered trade—not always personally, for to do so was forbidden—but through their freedmen; they had gone into land speculation, however, for it was permissible for even a Senator to buy and sell land. Their chief source of income, indeed, came from their landed possessions. The Knights, however, who formed the second rank in the city, could and did become business men. They farmed the taxes, were the bankers and importers, operating in large and permanent companies. While the Forum was still crowded when a famous lawyer pleaded, the courts were not the only attractions there; the great Basilicae were the Lombard and Wall Streets of the time and crowded continually by buyers and sellers, lenders and borrowers. As "high finance" grew higher manufactures and retail trade declined. The trade guilds remained, but they were busied rather in ceremonial matters than with their trades. The freedmen carried on the retail business of the city—non-citizens, or men of defective citizenship, Dr. Greenidge calls them.

With agriculture, however, even the noblest Senator would deal without compunction. And so to time it came about that the Senators became the owners of most of the land. Great estates took the place of small holdings, farms were turned into sheep walks and cattle ranches. Between the millionaires of the rich and of the corn-exporting provinces the small holder often enough was glad to sell his little property lest a wealthy neighbor might seize it legally or illegally while he himself was absent in the army. And upon the great estates of the rich were herded thousands of slaves, among whom the poor citizens were not wanted even if they sought employment. Citizens were subject to military duties, slaves were not; the great landholders had no use for the former, therefore. In fact, no one except the Generals had any use for them; they had been crowded out of all occupations except the army.

Gracchus, as Dr. Greenidge points out, was not a mere demagogue. He had respect for vested rights, did not propose to touch the vast leaseholds; his proposals were really conservative, a return to long-existing statutes, and to enforce them he authorized a commission of three to hear and determine all cases arising under them.

Over the passage of the bill a great popular tumult occurred. Marcus Octavius, a Tribune and friend of Gracchus's, interposed, as was his right, to prevent the bill from being read, and a second time did the same. Gracchus then caused his deposition, and the bill was passed. Gracchus, his brother Caius, and his father-in-law were elected Commissioners. But, though the board could give land to the poor, it had no money with which to help them cultivate it. At this point Tiberius prepared a bill to use the legacy of Attalus, King of Pergamon, which he had left to the Roman people, for the purpose of starting in business the people to whom land had been assigned.

At this time the annual election of Tribunes took place, and the question arose as to the right of a Tribune to re-election. The election began, but the Senators interrupted it. They and their attendants "rushed" the election crowd, reached Tiberius, and clubbed him to death, and with him 300 of his adherents. Not one was slain by the sword.

But the law having been enacted, it remained in force—a curious instance of logical inconsistency, much like that of the Medes and Persians, as told by Daniel. The commission was active, and in six years the number of its citizens was increased by nearly a quarter, almost all of them new small holders. Thus Gracchus's failure proved a success in the end.

Caius Gracchus was not a mere imitator of his brother, but he trod so closely in his footsteps that his reputation is largely lost in that of the elder. Dr. Greenidge relates his hopes and his fate no less interestingly than he told of those of Tiberius. Space prevents any more than a mention of him, however. Of Cornelia, the mother of the Gracchi, something must be said. Of her writes Dr. Greenidge:

* * * That strange feeling which a great and beautiful life has often inspired, that it belongs to eternity rather than to the immediate past, and that it has few points of contact with the prosaic round of present existence, had almost banished from Cornelia's mind the selfish instincts of her loss. The memory of her sons drew no tear, her voice conveyed no intonation of sorrow or regret. She spoke of them as though they were historical figures of the past, men too distant and too great to arouse the weak emotion which darkens contemplation.

At her villa near Misenum she lived quietly, surrounded by all that was best in letters, exchanging gifts and letters with the great men of the earth, and there she died, possibly the only mother who shares equally with her sons a fame that has lasted for twenty-one centuries.

A Seashore Romance.

SANNA. By M. R. Waller, Author of "The Woodcarver of 'Lympus." Cloth, 12mo. Pp. 293. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

Sanna is a genuine sea maiden, full of fearless life, as well as of beauty and coquettish witchery. We like her none the less because she suggests the Sheila for whom many young hearts besides Dr. van Dyke's cherished a tender passion somewhere in the seventies. There will never be another Princess of Thule, but Sanna is a lovable girl, sure to capture the reader's sympathetic interest at her first appearance, and not to lose it until the curtain falls upon her romance. She has the best possible setting in Nantucket, with its simple-hearted ancient mariners left high and dry on the sands by the ebb of the whaling industry; its quaint old maids stamped with a sort of unalike perpetual youth; all the neighborly, homely life of the place pervaded by the brooding presence of the sea.

Miss Waller has succeeded in transferring to her pages the atmosphere of Nantucket, which is just another way of saying that one will find her novel an ideal Summer resort, restful, original, with a peculiar charm of its own.

The more ambitious characters are less human and appealing than are the plain Nantucket folk, and the labyrinthian mazes of a needlessly intricate plot are far less attractive than the path to Uncle Riah's grocery. As was the case with "The Woodcarver of 'Lympus," we should like the story much better without the smirch with which the author just touches it. Passion and wrong are the very roots of many romances, but Miss Waller's are so innocent and healthful that an episode of sin seems to be something extraneous and pinned on, not an inevitable feature of the novel. She has not yet learned to keep her material well in hand. Certain characters, which we are sure she intended to use and develop, rather aimlessly fade away; some might be dispensed with altogether; others would well have repaid expansion. The author's art falls below her invention.

Nevertheless, "Sanna" is a well-written, wholesome, breezy tale, a welcome addition to the library of Summer fiction, a distinct advance upon "The Woodcarver of 'Lympus," and holding much promise of still better work.

THE PUBLISHERS.

Plans of Some of Them—Forthcoming New Books.

"OUR FIRST CENTURY" is the title of an important work upon which George Cary Eggleston has been engaged for some time, and which A. S. Barnes will publish shortly as the first volume in the series Little History of American Life. Like his brother, the late Edward Eggleston, with whom the author was so closely associated, Mr. Eggleston has always been interested in the more personal side of history—the life, manners, and customs of the people. Much of his material for the new book was accumulated with many advantages, and he had ready access to his brother's extensive library.

The Macmillan Company has received and will issue this Spring "The Foundations of Sociology," a new book by Prof. Edward A. Ross of the University of Nebraska, author of "Social Control." The author's aim is to show what tends to be in society, and not what has been or ought to be, and he has made an attempt "to lay down the foundation for a social science that shall withstand the severest logical tests."

McClure, Phillips & Co. are about to bring out a new edition of Emily Holt's "Encyclopaedia of Etiquette," in which will be new chapters on etiquette in foreign countries and etiquette of travel. The same firm reports that the United States Navy has adopted for the use of ships' crews Cyrus Townsend Brady's "Indian Fights and Fighters," Joel Chandler Harris's "Little Union Scout," and Booth Tarkington's "In the Arena."

The Funk & Wagnalls Company is publishing an edition in twenty-six volumes of the complete works of Tolstoy, translated with his approval by Louise and Aylmer Maude. His "What Is Art?" will be in its original form, with a preface by the author, in which he tells the reader to judge his views on art in their present shape.

G. P. Putnam's Sons have down for issue at the end of this month or the beginning of June "Money Inflation in the United States; a Study in Social Pathology," by Dr. Murray Shipley Wildman of Central College, Missouri. In Part I. of the book the writer states the psychological principles which underlie the motives of persons under pressure for certain economic conditions; Part II. deals with the economic conditions which prevailed in the four periods of American history.

Dodd, Mead & Co. have postponed until the Fall the publication of the new volume of essays by Hamilton Wright Mabie. This house also announces that it has in active preparation "The Art of Organ Building," by George Ashdown Audsley. The edition de luxe of the book will appear in half vellum.

The Funk & Wagnalls Company has bought the complete rights in the Pulpit Commentary from Kegan Paul, Trübner, Trench & Co., of London. The work comprises fifty-one royal octavo volumes, edited by well-known theologians of all denominations. The publishers further state that the translation of Dr. Dubois's work by Dr. Smith Ely Jelliffe will appear with the title "Psychic Treatment of Nervous Disorders," instead of "Psychoneurosis and Its Moral Treatment," as first announced.

E. P. Dutton & Co. have in press "A Mother of Czars," being a sketch of the life of Maria Feodorowna, wife of Paul II. and mother of Alexander I. and Nicholas I., by Mrs. Colquhoun Grant, author of "The French Noblesse of the Eighteenth Century," &c., and "Letters from Catalonia and Other Parts of Spain," by Rowland Thirlmere, in two volumes, with colored illustrations.

McClure, Phillips & Co. have postponed until June 1 the publication of Booth Tarkington's new novelette, "The Beautiful Lady," and Dr. Felix Adler's "Religion of Duty," edited and arranged by Leslie W. Sprague.

Longmans, Green & Co. are publishing "Hay Fever," a novel, by Walter Herries Pollock and Guy C. Pollock. The story has to do with some business proposals made by a stock broker, an "easy-going, impulsive, wealthy, lucky old idiot," who is troubled with hay fever. A friend recommends a remedy, which produces unexpected results.

Keppler & Schwarzmann, proprietors of Puck, will shortly publish a historical novel, "Monsieur d'en Brochette," by Bert Leston Taylor, Arthur H. Folwell, and John Kendrick Bangs, with illustrations by Frank A. Nankivell. The narrative tells of the wooing of a French nobleman of the Countess Isabelle, who was at one time affianced to the Duc de Pommes des Terres Au Gratin.

The Webb Publishing Company of St. Paul, Minn., is bringing out "The Gold Mine in the Front Yard and How to Work It," by C. S. Harrison, the well-known nature writer. The volume treats of fruits, flowers, hints and suggestions selection of plants, &c. It is fully illustrated.

Walter J. Travis's article in the June issue of Country Life in America, on "Changes in the Game of Golf" will describe the effect on the game of the author's new invention of a fifty-inch driver. The article will be illustrated from photographs for which Mr. Travis posed.

The article in the next number of The Century, on "Our Heralds of Storm and Flood," by Gilbert H. Grosvenor, author of "A New Method of Purifying Water," "Inoculating the Ground," &c., will begin a series about the scientific work of the Department of Agriculture, especially the results obtained by the Weather Bureau.

The current issue of The Journal of Outdoor Life of Saranac Lake, N. Y., has a paper by Dr. E. L. Trudeau, President of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, on "Sleeping Out of Doors." The writer recommends sleeping out of doors for those threatened by consumption.

The Frederick A. Stokes Company is publishing "The Wedding Souvenir," a new gift book containing thoughts of great poets and prose writers on the wedding day, the ring, marriage, love, sympathy, forbearance, duty, constancy, unity, hope, and other appropriate subjects. There are also a wedding certificate and a page for autographs and various records.

Isaac Pitman & Sons are about to bring out "Money, Exchange, and Banking Practically Considered," a manual for bank officials, business men, and commercial students, by H. T. Easton, and "The Law of Heavy and Light Mechanical Traction on Highways in the United Kingdom," by C. A. Montague Barlow, LL. D.

The forthcoming novel, "Mrs. Essington," according to the authors, Esther and Lucia Chamberlain, "is not an observation of sectional types and local color, but the California atmosphere and landscape are used with the story because that country and atmosphere are vital and young, and in these triumphant qualities they reflect the motif of the story." As was announced, the book will appear May 18 through The Century Company.

The Hall Publishing Company is issuing a new "Automobile Register and Tourists' Guide." It includes forty-one descriptive touring routes in New York State, official registration of 16,000 owners of automobiles, with description of machines; a list of towns and cities, State laws, ordinances, repair and charging stations throughout the State, hotels, trade directory, &c.

Charles Scribner's Sons are issuing the thirteenth volume in the Strad Library, the series of books devoted to the violin. It is on "Violin Solo Playing," by William Henley, a well-known English player. Among the topics discussed are solo playing, soloists, and solos. The author also includes suggestions which are the result of practical experience.

The articles by Oliver Bronson Capen on "Country Homes of Famous Americans," which have been appearing in Country Life in America, will appear through Doubleday, Page & Co. in October, with an introduction by Thomas Wentworth Higginson. Among the homes described will be those of Jefferson, Irving, Whittier, Longfellow, Thoreau, Emerson, Washington, Henry Clay, Hawthorne, Gen. Lee, Lowell, Bryant, Jackson, Holmes, Webster, Madison, and John Bartram. The book will retain its name, and will contain numerous unpublished photographs.

Dodd, Mead & Co. are issuing Vol V. of the "Original Journals of the Lewis and Clark Expedition, 1804-1806," edited by Reuben Gold Thwaites. The book contains the journals of the explorers describing the journey home from Musquetoe Creek to St. Louis, May 8 to Sept. 26, 1806. Two more volumes and an atlas are in preparation, which will complete the set. The illustrations in this fifth volume include fac similes of drawings by Lewis and Clark of fishing implements used by Indians, maps, plans, and manuscript pages.

Doubleday, Page & Co. will issue Thomas Dixon, Jr.'s, new volume of essays, "The Life Worth Living," May 20. Besides the opening chapter on "Dreams and Disillusions," showing what the author calls "the horrors of city life," there will be other chapters on "Beside Beautiful Waters," "Some Sins of Nature," "The Shouts of Children," "In the Haunts of Wild Fowl," "What is Life?" &c.

Alfred Henry Lewis says that in his "Sunset Trail," which A. S. Barnes & Co. are publishing, "it is with the cattle day that I have dealt. In doing this I have seized on a real man, and in its tragedy at least, told what really happened." It is interesting to know that a leading character in the book is the well-known "Bat" Masterson, now in his peaceful later years, whom President United States Marshal.

The new edition, the sixth of Thomas Dixon's "Clansman," which Doubleday, Page & Co. are issuing, will not have the name of Senator Morrill, instead, that of Roman has been substituted. The change was made because the daughters of the Senator complained to the author that their father was misrepresented, but Mr. Dixon replied that he got his facts from history. This did not satisfy them, so the name was altered.

The passing of Joseph Jefferson gives added value and interest to his "autobiography, published, after its serial run in The Century Magazine, by The Century Company. The volume is full of characteristic humor, stories of the stage, reminiscences of colleagues, and advice and criticism.

Ellen Glasgow's new novel, entitled "The Wheel of Life," is announced by Doubleday, Page & Co. for publication the middle of January. It is a Virginia story, and said to be the most mature work of the author so far.

"A Hair of the Dog."

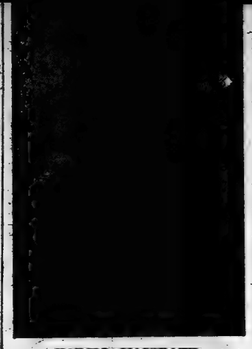
THE CRIMSON BLIND. By Fred. M. White, Author of "Tregarthen's Wife," "The Robe of Lucifer," &c. Illustrations by Victor Prout. 12mo. Pp. 378. New York: R. F. Fenno & Co.

Here is a new and ingenious application of that old saw about the hair of the dog. Since story writers have most practice in the concoction of plots, what could be more logical than to employ a story writer to resolve a real mystery into its elements? Yet neither private persons nor the police so far have formed the habit in cases of conspiracy and crime of consulting the criminal novelist. Wherefore it is most considerate of Mr. White to give the hint in fiction. He weaves a most elaborate conspiracy, and has the young ladies most interested in discovering and checkmating the villain and devising counter-plots, seek the advice and help of the most popular novelist of the day. By that means, of course, the process of untying the knot is as complicated and devious as the original process of knotting it. Which strings out the story good and long and provides a surprise in every chapter.

Mr. White has further taken a hint from Sir Arthur Conan Doyle as to the use of fierce dogs, and avails himself of a mysterious telephone message at night and of a meeting with a beautiful girl in the dark. The ringing of that telephone bell, in fact, ushers in the story, and, with the meeting of the unseen girl just afterward, provides the eagerest thrills which the book in its course affords.

Mighels's New Book.

Philip Verrill Mighels, author of that "Bruvver Jim's Baby," which was matter of some correspondence in THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW a year ago, has written another novel which the Harpers are about to publish. This time Mr. Mighels has left the West behind him—left babies also behind him. His story is one of New York and politics and the ways of rings and ambitious and confident young men who join in with such rings in order to spy out the methods of them and so destroy them in the end. Mr. Mighels's hopeful young man is called Hakon, there's a "boss" named Graystone who has a daughter as well as a machine and designs to make Hakon President and his son-in-law, there's a Mrs. Meabe (eloquent designation) who is a siren and spins entanglements for the honest politician's feet, and there's the girl the honest politician really loves. The story is said to be one of strength and interest.



HAROLD MACGRATH.
Author of "The Princess Elopes."

Mr. Harold MacGrath, author of "The Puppet Crown" and "The Man on the Box," will again endear himself to thousands with his new novel, "The Princess Elopes," which is just published in the "Pocket Book Series" by the Bobbs-Merrill Company. "The Princess Elopes" is a romance of the grand duchy of Barscheit and is one of the daintiest, most charming and most romantic tales in modern fiction. The hero is a strangely involved prince-cowboy-quarterback-doctor, Max Scharfenstein. As for bewitching Princess Gretchen—read the book; that is the only way to gain even an approximation of the proper adjectives for such a combination of grace, spirit, beauty, and coquetry.—Boston Globe.

H. V. CROKER'S ROMANCE REVEALED BY HIS DEATH

Was Engaged to Marry Miss Jeannette Horton of This City.

MRS. CROKER HAD OBJECTED

Coroner's Jury Says ex-Tammany Leader's Son Died from Narcotic Poison—Kansas City Arrests.

A letter taken from the pocket of Herbert V. Croker, son of Richard Croker, who was found dead in his seat on a train near Newton, Kan., yesterday morning, led to the revelation of a romance in his life. He was, it appears, engaged to Miss Jeannette Neal Horton, formerly of Horton, Delaware County, this State, but now living with her mother at 153 West Twenty-second Street.

Miss Horton avers that she and Mr. Croker became engaged the night before he started for the West, which was on May 4, and her statement is corroborated by her mother, who said last evening that Mr. Croker had asked for her daughter's hand and had been accepted by her as her future son-in-law. Mrs. Croker, the young man's mother, denies all knowledge of her son's engagement, and went so far as to authorize the statement last evening that she did not believe Miss Horton's assertion.

Miss Horton last evening denounced the printed stories about Mr. Croker having been in an opium den.

"It's a libel on Herbert's memory," she said. "He did not smoke opium; of that I am certain. He may have taken a little too much drink, and this may have affected his heart. He told me several times that he had a weak heart.

"I knew Herbert for seven months before we were engaged," she continued. "I knew his brother, poor Frank, long before that. Herbert and I wished to marry, and he told me he had spoken to his mother and that she had objected. I had never met his mother, but I knew Flossie, his sister. I could not see why Mrs. Croker should object.

"The night before Herbert left for the West we became engaged. He was to go to Bliss, Oklahoma, and I was to follow him there in two weeks. My mother was to go with us, and the marriage was to take place at a friend's house there. I suppose it was Ranch 101, which the papers speak of as the place he was going to. I cannot say whether Herbert, in view of her opposition, told his mother of his determination to marry.

"He was just beginning to make money, and he said that he had as many opportunities open to him as Frank had had."

Her mother a little later added something to Miss Horton's interview. With her was a man who appeared to be a clergyman.

"I notice," said Mrs. Horton, "that some of the papers say my daughter supports the family. That is not true. I notice also that they say that I am a widow, which again is not true."

"Your daughter does not work, then?" was asked.

"She does work," interposed the man. "You'd better tell, it will get out anyway."

Mrs. Horton denied that Miss Horton was an actress, but refused to tell her daughter's vocation.

Richard Croker, Jr., who is now on his way to the West to bring the body of his brother on to this city, is not expected to arrive there until Monday.

Special to The New York Times.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 13.—Herbert V. Croker, in the opinion of the Corner's jury to-day, came to his death from the effects of narcotic poison taken into his system before he boarded the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé train yesterday.

Chief Hayes says there is little to indicate that Croker was robbed, and none to show that he was drugged unless by himself. Croker was helped to the Santa Fé train Thursday evening by Charles Wilson, a negro porter at the Coates House. At that time he was in a dazed condition. The negro counted $19 to him on the train, he says.

Wilson and the two Chinamen who run the opium resort are in jail, held for investigation. From what could be learned from these men and others, it seems that Croker came to Kansas City Thursday morning and checked his umbrella and rain coat at the Coates House. When he returned to the hotel about 6:30 he proposed to the negro, according to the latter, that they go somewhere and "have a good time." After a few drinks they went to the opium resort over the Negro Club at 123 West Fifth Street, and Croker spent an hour there smoking opium.

Ah Lee, when questioned by Chief Hayes, insisted that Croker "smoked only three pills." He went to sleep in the Chinaman's place, and Ah Lee woke him up and made him go to the negro porter, who was playing pool in another part of the building. The negro went to a saloon with Croker, and they drank beer. Ah Lee says that to drink after smoking opium is very dangerous.

Croker's clothing consisted of a black unfinished worsted suit, the coat a three-button sack. The collar bore the mark of a New York tailor. Both coat and trousers were well worn. His shirt had the initials "F. H. C." and a trade mark. His black derby hat bore the trade mark, "Powers, Minneapolis, Minn.," and initials "D. N. B." cut in the inside lining. On his patent leather button shoes was the mark, "Robert Whyte, 51 West Forty-second Street, New York." Gauze underwear had the initials "F. C." and "R. C. Jr."

C. C. Miller, manager of the famous 101 Ranch, at Bliss, Oklahoma, wires as follows in regard to letters he received for Croker:

"One of the letters was from C. M. Carlisle, New York, asking Croker how he was getting along and stating that he would join him soon. The other letter was from Chicago, wanting to know how he was getting along and how he liked the place. I received a letter from 'Zack' Mulhall, stating that Croker was coming and to take good care of him."

RICHARD CROKER NOT COMING.

Says His Son's Heart Had Been Affected for Five Years.

DUBLIN, May 13.—Richard Croker does not intend to go to the United States for the funeral of his son Herbert.

Mr. Croker said that he had no reason to suspect foul play, as Herbert's heart had been affected for five years. Herbert was making the trip West for his health, Mr. Croker said, and he was convinced that his son had died a natural death.

FOLLOW RACERS ON MOUNTS.

August Belmont and Party Gallop for View of Steeplechase.

A spectacle absolutely new in steeplechase racing was introduced yesterday at Belmont Park, when, with the running of the Whitney Memorial Steeplechase, a large party of the riding and hunting colony about the race course, under the leadership of August Belmont, followed the chase on horseback in the infield, and, as they scurried about to get the best view possible, made almost as entertaining a race as the champion steeplechase horses did.

It was the first time in modern racing over an artificial steeplechase course that horses other than the racers have been permitted to enter the field while a race was in progress, and the innovation was one that puzzled the spectators not a little when the riding party began to assemble in groups as the nine horses that ran for the Whitney Memorial went to the starting post. The saddle horses and hunters in most cases were led across the regular track, and the riders mounted after the starters in the big cross-country race were on the way to the post, just in front of the club stand.

Mr. Belmont himself was one of those who then got into the saddle, his mount being a bay thoroughbred. He wore a riding costume in which he had spent the early part of the afternoon about the club stand, riding leggings, and a soft hat with a bright-colored band of cream and vivid green being the most conspicuous part of his attire. With him was his son Raymond, also well mounted on a trained hunter. Harry S. Page, the amateur jockey, who had withdrawn his horse Ivan from the race, was another of the mounted party in the field, which also included several women.

When the start was made and the steeplechasers began the run around the first turn, the riding spectators wheeled their horses and cut across the field, galloping at a good pace to the other side of the course, and thereafter hurrying from one point to another, seeking to be close to the racing steeplechasers through all the contest, and scurrying about in a style that added much to the interest of the spectacle that was presented to the occupants of the grand and field stands.

Mr. Belmont's horse Imperialist finally dropped so far out of the race that he no longer was a contender, but Mr. Belmont and his party continued to follow the chase until the last round of the course was made. Then all the mounted spectators gathered near the finish line, where they saw Good and Plenty come on and win after a fine contest from Flying Buttress. Immediately after the decision of the steeplechase the group of spectators on horseback left the infield and returned to the club stand.

WOMAN SENSELESS IN CAB.

Her Companions Disappear and Police Are Seeking Them.

A young woman was found unconscious last night in a cab in front of 245 West Twenty-first Street. Her companions, a man and a woman, left her hurriedly on an apparently fictitious excuse of finding her relatives, when policeman Scheedel appeared.

The woman, who was thought to be under the influence of liquor or drugs, or possibly both, is in the New York Hospital in a serious condition. The driver of the cab, Robert Thompson of 213 West Thirty-eighth Street, and employed by Proctor's Stable, at Fifty-eighth Street and Sixth Avenue, was arrested on suspicion. The police are looking for the two persons who were seen with the unconscious woman.

Two little girls who live in West Twenty-first Street saw the now missing man and woman supporting their senseless companion along the street until she collapsed in front of No. 245, and her companions laid her on the steps there. The man went away, and in about ten minutes returned with the cab driven by Thompson. A crowd that had gathered saw the woman put into the cab.

As she lay with her head out on one side and her feet on the other Policeman Scheedel came up. The man explained to Scheedel that the woman was a friend of his, and that he was going to take her home.

"She has relatives in the next block," he told Scheedel, "and I will go down and get them and have them come here for her."

Both the man and the woman walked away. Scheedel waited about fifteen minutes, and, as the man and woman did not return, he ordered the cab driver to take the unconscious woman to the West Twentieth Street Police Station. She was removed from there to the hospital.

In the woman's pocket was a letter addressed "Miss Mackay, 330 Sixth Avenue." At 340 West Twenty-first Street the address given to Scheedel by the man and woman, who vanished, it was said that no one in the house was missing and that no one named Mackay lived there.

SKYSCRAPER CHURCH A CLUB.

Rockefeller to Give Money for Novel Institution in Cleveland.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, May 13.—John D. Rockefeller, it is understood, will aid in building the largest church in Ohio. While it is to be a Baptist church, it is to be open all the time for every one who wishes to make use of it. The Rev. Charles A. Eaton of the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, Mr. Rockefeller's pastor, is behind the movement. He will celebrate his fourth anniversary as pastor here next month, and on that occasion will announce his plans.

It is the intention to erect on the site of the present church edifice, which is very old, a skyscraper church, perhaps ten or twelve stories high. It is admitted that Mr. Rockefeller has agreed to furnish the money needed, which will reach far into the hundreds of thousands.

The Rev. Mr. Eaton is to have free rein to exploit certain ideas of his on practical religion. He purposes to utilize the church building largely for club purposes, where the people of the city and visitors from without may drop in, read the latest books and periodicals, or find amusement in some other way. He will also have quarters fitted up for social organizations, athletic clubs, and other associations that he hopes to organize, not for the benefit of church members, but for those who are now kept away from church because they think the atmosphere too frigid.

Dr. Eaton has many other innovations that he hopes to embody in this building, and Mr. Rockefeller is said to be heartily

VICE ADMIRAL NAZITOFF KILLED BY AN ORDERLY

Murderer Was Angry at an Order to Proceed to the Front.

A BOMB FACTORY IN ODESSA

Discovered in Sailors' Quarter—Fears That To-day Will Be Another "Red Sunday" in Russia.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 13.—Vice Admiral Nazitoff was shot and killed by an orderly in his room to-day. The orderly fired three shots from a revolver at the Admiral. The crime is attributed to the anger of the murderer at his dismissal from his duties as orderly and an order to proceed to the front.

A bomb factory has been discovered in the sailors' quarter of Odessa. Six bombs ready for use were found on the premises.

To-morrow, the Russian May Day, is awaited with nervousness both by the public and the authorities. The revolutionary agitators would like to make it another "Red Sunday" in every city of the empire, and everywhere are urging workmen to celebrate the fête with anti-Government demonstrations and to resist with arms if the police and troops interfere.

Some Radicals are warning the authorities that the meetings are meant to be pacific, but a perusal of the countless proclamations with which St. Petersburg, for instance, is flooded proves that it is really intended to precipitate collisions. Many workmen are said to be armed with bombs and revolvers, and a large stock of pistols of an automatic repeating type, smuggled in for the revolutionists, is being offered for sale to the initiated at cost price.

The saner Liberals, and even those of radical views, realizing the futility of bloodshed, are counseling the workmen not to jeopardize their lives uselessly. The police also have issued systematic warnings. Nevertheless, the Social Democrats and Social Revolutionists have called big meetings to be held at Smolensk Field on Vassili Island, at the Preobrajensk Cemetery; at Petrovsky Park, in the Viborg quarter; at several places in the Putiloff district, and at other industrial centres.

Gov. Gen. Trepoff and Director of Police Kovalensky, while expressing the hope that all will be quiet to-morrow as far as St. Petersburg is concerned, admit the possibility of disorders.

Elaborate precautions have been taken. The garrison of the city was further reinforced this week and a large detachment of Don Cossacks arrived to-night. They stared open-eyed at their first view of the St. Isaac's Cathedral and other sights of the big city as they rode to their quarters.

Twenty-five thousand Cossacks are stationed to-night in various quarters of the city, principally in the outskirts, and all of the Guard Regiments are under arms, but specific written orders issued by Prince Vassilchikoff, the Grand Duke Vladimir's aide, who will be in active command, are that the order to fire must under no circumstances be given until the troops are actually attacked. Special orders have also been given to the Cossacks, who with the gendarmerie will be used to disperse crowds, not even to draw their sabres unless a Cossack is killed or wounded, but to employ their whips freely if necessary to scatter demonstrators.

The workmen of Kharkoff have proclaimed a general strike for to-morrow, and the Governor is taking special precautions to prevent disorders.

Dispatches from Riga, Libau, and Reval announce the inauguration of a general three days' strike in the Baltic ports, where the Social Democrats are strong. The leaders told the workmen the demonstrations were intended to be peaceful, and that they were designed primarily to prevent the dispatch of troops to St. Petersburg and Moscow, where serious demonstrations were intended.

The police to-day discovered a bomb manufactory in a student's room at Kieff. The bombs were intended for use to-morrow.

Serious demonstrations are expected to-morrow at Baku, Batoum, Kutais, and other cities in the Caucasus. The workmen are exceedingly well organized, and the suspension of work, which began to-day, is complete. The cities are flooded with proclamations, and merchants received notices from the Revolutionary Committee that shops must be closed to-day, to-morrow, and Monday. The order is being obeyed.

BOSTON BOYS CHASE HINDU.

Gamins Tear Souvenirs from Baba Barati's Flowing Garments.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 13.—Baba Barati, the Hindu priest who came from India last Summer to the Peace Congress, and since then has been entertained in the social circles of the Back Bay, was mobbed last night by boys in the West End.

Baba still wears the picturesque flowing yellow clothing that made him conspicuous at the meetings of the congress.

Shouts and laughter were followed by pulling at his clothing, and many souvenirs were captured by the urchins. One youngster grabbed his baggy trousers and something gave way.

With a groan the pursued man pulled up his garments and fled. A haven was reached in the quarters of the association before which he was to lecture. Outside the boys hooted and made so much noise that the members appointed a committee to go out and disperse them.

THE STRAW HAT IS HERE.

Curb Brokers Discover It and Suspend to Cheer the Wearer.

The first straw hat of the season in Wall Street made its appearance yesterday morning. A tall, foreign-looking young man wore it. He strolled down Broad Street, hands in pockets, passed down by the curb market, and then turned back.

The curb had been active, but the curb is always ready to suspend for a few moments when the occasion requires it. The brokers all began to cheer. The young man looked around and smiled in a surprised sort of way. In front of the Mills Building he stopped and asked a cabman what it was all about.

The cabby explained, the young man smiled again, and disappeared in the direction of Wall Street.

PACKERS TO SEE PRESIDENT.

Complain of the Methods Used in Beef Trust Inquiry.

CHICAGO, May 13.—Representatives of four large meat packing companies have gone to Washington with the intention of making a protest on Monday next to President Roosevelt against the manner in which they declare the investigation into the beef industries is conducted before a Federal Grand Jury. The protest, it is said, will be made along the following lines:

That packing-house witnesses have been browbeaten before the jury and compelled to tell what they know; that questionable detective methods have been used by Secret Service men to secure information for the Government; that the wives of packers have been called before the Grand Jury to testify against their husbands, who are out of the city, and they have been forced to remain constantly in Chicago for no apparent reason; that the private mail of some of the packers has fallen into the hands of the Government when the mail had nothing to do with the beef investigation; that the general treatment of the packers in Chicago by the local Federal authorities has been such as would be accorded by the police toward a common criminal.

It is said that the packers have already arranged for a meeting with the President.

DRAGGED TO DEATH BY CAR.

Aged Woman's Foot Caught in Step as the Vehicle Started.

Dragged along for more than 100 feet, with her foot caught in the step of a car and her head and shoulders rasping over the pavement at Melrose Avenue and One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Street, Mrs. Emily Voetsch, sixty-five years old, of 645 East One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Street, was so badly hurt last night that she died within a few minutes after her reception in Lebanon Hospital. The conductor, William T. Hepburn, of 423 Willis Avenue, was arrested.

A north-bound Mount Vernon car, crowded with passengers, stopped at One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Street while the conductor was up in front collecting fares. He looked back, supposing that every one who desired had gotten on or off, and inquired, "All right?" Several persons, including a policeman, were on the rear platform. Some one called back "all right" to the conductor, and he rang for the motorman to go ahead.

As soon as the car started, there was a cry from the rear platform that some one had fallen off. Hepburn rang the emergency signal, but several passengers also pulled the bell, confusing the motorman, so that he did not stop the car until it reached One Hundred and Fifty-seventh Street. Mrs. Voetsch had attempted to board the car, and had one foot on the step when it started. Her foot and dress were caught in the step, and the starting of the car jerked her off her feet, so that she had hung from the step as the car went on and dragged her.

BERI-BERI KILLS OFFICER.

Lieut. Commander Truxtun Acquired Disease in Philippines.

Special to The New York Times.

NORFOLK, Va., May 13.—Lieut. Commander William Truxtun of the navy, retired, died this morning at St. Vincent's Hospital, where he had been for six weeks. While serving as executive officer on the gunboat Manila in the Philippines three years ago, he contracted beri-beri, which developed into a complication of diseases, and compelled his retirement from the service.

Commander Truxtun entered the navy in 1876, and was forty-four years of age. He was a son of Commodore William Talbot Truxtun, and a great-grandson of Commodore Thomas Truxtun, after whom the torpedo boat destroyer is named. During the Spanish-American war Lieut. Truxtun was Executive Officer of the gunboat Bancroft, which was engaged in the Cuban blockade. His last service was as Executive Officer of the receiving ship Independence at the Mare Island Navy Yard.

Beri-beri is a tropical disease, believed by some to be of the miasmatic order and by others a species of poisoning resembling lead or alcohol poisoning. Poor diet is usually the cause, but, unlike the plague and cholera, the disease is not as a rule fatal, although recovery is slow. In the acute stage the heart is attacked.

ATHLETES PUT OUT FIRE.

Bucket Brigade's Work Effective—Captive Tenants Scared.

The Ashford Athletic Club of Brooklyn gave a ball last night at Leboner's Dexter Park, Jamaica Avenue and Enfield Street, East New York. A feature of the ball was target practice in the shooting gallery. While the shooting was going on somebody shot a hole through a gasoline lamp. An explosion followed, and a cry of "Fire!" sent the dancers on a stampede for the open air.

The fire spread rapidly. Thomas Hicks, the head waiter, and George C. Lebener, the proprietor, instead of waiting for the firemen, organized a bucket brigade. The guests entered with zest upon the work of drenching out the flames.

Next door to the picnic ground is the East New York Truant School. It contained 150 boys last night. Superintendent Spurdle had them lined up for fire drill in readiness for any emergency. When the firemen arrived, however, the fire had already been put out with about $400 damage. Then the athletes, with their companions, returned to the ballroom and the captive truants to their beds.

LIVE WIRES FELL FIREMEN.

Nine Severely Shocked at Blaze in Pelham Park.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., May 13.—The New Rochelle Fire Department was called upon this forenoon to assist in extinguishing a fire in the handsome residence of former Congressman Alexander R. Smith in Pelham Park.

The Pelham firemen had responded quickly to the alarm, but before they had been long at work six of their number were temporarily knocked out by coming in contact with live electric wires. It was then that the New Rochelle firemen were called upon. Three of them also were shocked by live wires, but all soon recovered. The loss was about $30,000.

ADMIRAL DEWEY ABSENT FROM PATRIOTS' DINNER

Mrs. Dewey Sent Note That He Had Been Taken Violently Ill.

HER NAME OFF GUEST LIST

Admiral Said She Couldn't Attend, It Was Explained—Nothing Known of His Illness at Hotel.

Admiral Dewey, Governor General of the General Court of the Order of the Founders and Patriots of America, did not attend the ninth annual banquet of the New York State branch of that order, held last night in the Hotel Astor. He was re-elected yesterday afternoon, and was expected to be the principal speaker at the banquet. Late in the afternoon Theodore Fitch, Governor of the New York Society, received the following note from Mrs. Dewey:

"Admiral Dewey came over to New York Thursday expressly to be present at the meeting of the society to-day, and for the banquet to-night. He was taken violently ill yesterday, and is unable to leave his bed to-day. He is greatly distressed at the contretemps and begs that you will make his regrets to the General Court and to Governor Theodore Fitch that he cannot dine with the society this evening."

The note was read by Mr. Fitch when the diners had seated themselves, and caused considerable stir. Mr. Fitch said that he had no doubt the Admiral regretted his inability to be present even more than did the members of the association.

At the Hotel Cambridge the clerk said that the Admiral was keeping to his apartments, and that Mrs. Dewey had left orders that he must not be disturbed. The clerk said that if the Admiral was ill nobody in the hotel knew anything about it, and that, so far as he was informed, no physician had been called in.

Some comment was made on the fact that the name of Mrs. Dewey did not appear on the list of guests as published for the banquet. Gov. Fitch said that this was due to a letter he had received from the Admiral on Friday. Admiral Dewey wrote that his wife would be unable to attend and for this reason her name was omitted, as the list was printed after the receipt of the letter.

There were other absentees at last night's banquet. Robert B. Roosevelt, a former Governor, was indisposed, and Brig. Gen. Frederick D. Grant, former Governor General, was detained at the military tournament. Gov. Fitch presided as toastmaster.

There were many women, wives and daughters of members present, College Hall, in which the dinner was given, was beautifully decorated. The souvenirs, enameled pins fashioned after the flag of the society, were among the handsomest given at any banquet of the season.

In calling the company to order Gov. Fitch recalled the fact that the banquet celebrated the two hundred and ninety-eighth anniversary of the settlement of Jamestown. He spoke of the requisites for membership in the society.

"We stand for good citizenship and right living," he declared. "For love of country and for true Americanism."

In the absence of Admiral Dewey, Rear Admiral Joseph B. Coghlan responded to the toast "The Navy." After paying his tribute to Dewey, and according him credit for the victory at Manila Bay, he told the story of that momentous struggle, beginning with the departure of the American fleet from Hongkong and winding up with the sinking of the last Spanish ship.

Walter S. Logan, Attorney General of the General Court of the Founders, said the work of the patriot was needed in 1905 as never before.

"There was never anything at San Juan Hill that troubled Theodore Roosevelt as much as the corruption he found in the Post Office Department," he said. "Public welfare was never in so much peril from an armed enemy as from the influence of rebates given and free passes issued by the railroads.

"But we have our champions for good as well as for evil," he said. "No Revolutionary hero deserved better of his country than those two splendid Americans, Gov. Folk of Missouri and Gov. La Follette of Wisconsin. William Travers Jerome deserves to go down in history by the side of Anthony Wayne, and Orville H. Platt, who died the other day, was as true a hero as any knight of the olden days."

Other speakers were Eben E. Olcott, who responded to the toast, "The Discovery of the Hudson"; Edward Hagaman Hall, who told of the discovery of Jamestown, and Theodore Gilman, whose theme was "The Women Patriots of America."

The late Gen. Fitzhugh Lee had been requested to respond to the toast later assigned to Mr. Hall, and had accepted. Mr. Fitch made the announcement and proposed a toast to Gen. Lee's memory, to be drunk standing.

At the annual session of the General Court of the Order of Founders and Patriots of America, held in the Governor's room in the City Hall yesterday, the following officers were elected:

Governor General—Admiral George Dewey; Deputy Governor General—Edward Hagaman Hall of New York; Chaplain General—The Rev. Charles Wadsworth of Pennsylvania; Secretary General—Theodore Gilman of New York; Treasurer General—Henry D. Miller of New York; Attorney General—Walter Beth Logan of New York; Registrar General—Walter C. Faxon of Connecticut; Genealogist General—Edward Everett Sill of Connecticut; Historian General—Harry E. Atwater of New Jersey; Councilors General for three years—Theodore S. Gold of Connecticut; Judge James Albert Betts of New York, and Carlton M. Moody of Pennsylvania.

KILLED BY TEXAS TORNADO.

Woman Dead, Many Injured—Three Miles Swept of Houses.

MOUNT PLEASANT, Tex., May 13.—A tornado passed two and a half miles southeast of here this afternoon. Mrs. Gerald was killed and many persons injured.

The tornado struck the earth southwest of the city, and for a few moments it appeared as if the town would be destroyed, but the twisting funnel turned almost easterly, and after proceeding a mile, went northeast. The path was half a mile wide and the country for three miles was cleared of every house, barn, and fence.

To-night every doctor in Mount Pleasant is caring for the wounded. Clothing and food have been supplied in large quantities by citizens.

HARRY LEHR TALKS NO MORE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, May 13.—Harry Lehr arrived here to-day for the Horse Show next week. He is visiting his mother.

On his arrival Mr. Lehr made known his intention to retire from publicity henceforth.

"Really, you know, I cannot talk for publication. I am not to be interviewed any more, you know," was the way he put it.

"My lawyers will not allow me to talk for publication any more. The newspapers have said a great deal about me, and sometimes they have been very kind, but it is decided that I am no longer to be interviewed."

PHIPPS CHAUFFEUR ARRESTED

Refused to Stop at First When Policeman Called to Him.

Henry Allendorph of Westbury, L. I., who said he was chauffeur for Henry R. Phipps, the Pittsburg steel man and philanthropist, was arrested for exceeding the speed limit after a chase in Central Park West yesterday morning.

Bicycle Policeman Fitzgerald saw Allendorph in the big black touring car as he rounded into Central Park West from Seventy-second Street and started north. Fitzgerald set out in pursuit. At Seventy-fifth Street his watch showed a speed of eighteen miles an hour, and he called to the chauffeur to stop.

"I'm in a hurry, can't stop for you," shouted back Allendorph.

"If you don't there'll be trouble," the policeman yelled back.

The chauffeur stopped his machine at Seventy-seventh Street. He didn't want to drive to the station house, but the policeman threatened to make him walk, and he consented.

"Mr. Phipps will see about this to-morrow," said Allendorph to the Sergeant at the West Sixty-eighth Street Station. Later he sent a message to his employer.

Last night Mr. Phipps called up the station on the telephone and asked what bail would be necessary for the chauffeur. He was told $500 cash or $1,000 in real

ELECTRIC CONTROL FOR POOLROOM'S DEFENSES

Massive Doors Bar Raider Bourke's Way.

BATTERY OF ACIDS, TOO

With Big Force, Bourke Batters Into Fortified Place in West 3d Street —Finds Reversible Apparatus.

One of the most strongly fortified and most elaborately equipped poolrooms, the police say, that they ever have discovered in this city was raided yesterday afternoon in a four-story house in West Third Street, between Greene and Wooster Streets, by Acting Captain Bourke of the Mercer Street Station, under telephone orders from Police Commissioner McAdoo. Ten plain clothes men and twenty-five uniformed officers backed Capt. Bourke in the raid. Five prisoners were taken, and 250 men, patrons of the place, were detained until the raiders had examined them.

The place was defended by a series of strong doors. Some of them were seven inches thick, of oak planking, reinforced by plates of steel. Elaborate devices for concealing the nature of the establishment were found when the raiders succeeded in gaining entrance. Everything in the place was operated by electricity. The furnishings of the rooms used by the patrons were comfortable and artistic, though everything that was employed in the business of playing the races, the police say, could be changed in a moment by turning a switch to look like a picture or a wall motto.

Acting Captain Bourke and Commissioner McAdoo have known for some time of the existence of the place, but were restrained from acting without positive evidence by a temporary injunction obtained from Justice Scott, in the Supreme Court, by the alleged proprietor, a well-known sporting man.

A few days ago, however, a man who had played the races in the place went to Commissioner McAdoo and offered to give evidence to the effect that the place was a poolroom, to testify that he had played the races there, and to identify the men concerned in the management. Capt. Bourke obtained four warrants from Magistrate Cornell in the Jefferson Market Court.

Capt. Bourke assembled his raiding party in the vicinity of the suspected house shortly after 3 o'clock. He walked along to the entrance, in front of which the sidewalk consists of glass and cast iron, and, taking a sledge, he began battering at the sidewalk lights. He smashed a hole big enough to get through with two of his plain clothes men. Meanwhile four detectives had gone to the rear of the house and were battering away there with sledges and axes.

When the Captain dropped through the hole he found himself in a small room under the sidewalk, from which a narrow passage led to the rear of the cellar. Before he had gone ten feet he encountered a massive oak, steel-armored door, four inches thick. When he broke through this he found himself in another room, fitted up with an electric switchboard, containing nearly 100 switches. Each switch, say the police, worked some light, some disappearing blackboard, or picture, or device for indicating selections, odds, and other things necessary in the business of the place.

Passing beyond this room, Capt. Bourke and his two followers came to another door, fully seven inches thick. Ten feet further along the passage was a door of lesser strength, and behind the third door the Captain found himself in a large room, in the middle of which was a large stove with a fire in it. Capt. Bourke says that as he opened the door he found two men shoving racing sheets into the door of the stove.

Toward the front of the building the Captain entered a large room in which were about 300 men. When Bourke entered this room, he says, he saw a man standing on a chair taking down a blackboard on which were chalked odds of the races at Belmont Park and elsewhere, and throwing into its place a large picture, which was swung by weights from a recess in the wall. The Captain tore the blackboard from the man's hands, whereat half a dozen men in the room rushed forward and tried with their handkerchiefs to wipe off the chalked figures thereon. The Captain drew his revolver and drove them back. When the detectives came in resistance ceased.

The entrance to the alleged poolroom for its patrons, Capt. Bourke says, was through a small cigar store in front. From this store were two passageways, blocked at short intervals by massive doorways, electrically controlled. Another feature of the defenses was discovered by Detective Upton as he was cutting through the partition and the passageway to the poolroom. Between the walls were rows of bottles filled with acids and evil-smelling liquids, for use apparently as auxiliary defenses. Capt. Bourke thinks that the equipment must have cost at least $10,000.

This place was raided two months ago by Roundsman Mulligan of the Mercer Street Station. At that time the raiders found no evidence that a poolroom was conducted in the place, but discovered instead a party seated about a table at a banquet, with waiters serving them. Photographs of this banquet, presented to Justice Scott, helped the counsel for the proprietors to get the injunction against further interference.

SAVES THREE DROWNING BOYS

F. S. Wardwell Jumps from Car and Reaches Them Just in Time.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn., May 13.—Passengers on a trolley car passing through Rowayton to-day heard loud cries for help, and in the Five Mile River Inlet of the Sound they saw three boys struggling in the water.

Frederick Schuyler Wardwell, a contracting engineer, leaped from the car, threw off his outer garments as he ran, and jumped into the inlet and swam out to the trio.

He was just in time. Herbert Arnold, seven years old, the eldest of the boys, was trying to get the little sons of F. D. Krauss ashore. He was worn out by his efforts and was so weak that he could scarcely help himself. The Krauss boys were sinking when Mr. Wardwell reached them and brought them ashore. It required heroic treatment to revive the younger of the two.

MAY 1905

NATION'S TRADE POLICY AS OUTLINED BY SHAW

No Retaliatory Tariffs, He Tells Railway Delegates.

ANXIOUS FOR WORLD'S PEACE

Four American Members Added to the Permanent Commission—The Congress Ended.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Secretaries Shaw and Taft were present at a banquet given at the New Willard this evening by the permanent commission of the International Railway Congress to the Railway Guild and the officers of the congress. Secretary Shaw delivered the principal speech, saying, in part:

"It is a pleasure and a very great honor to bring the President's greetings to so many distinguished gentlemen representing so many great nations. Your mission here is not only peaceful, but that which you represent tends toward the world's peace.

"As there is no disturber of commerce so great as war, so there is no such lover of peace as commerce. In proportion as a people become interested in financial, industrial, and commercial pursuits do they dread and abhor the devastation incident to martial conflicts. The United States stands pledged to the utmost of its influence to the preservation of the world's peace.

"It may not be out of place in this connection to define briefly the international commercial policy of the United States. What I shall say in this regard relates to the past and the present, and is in no sense a pledge or prediction as to the future. It would be out of place in this presence either to defend this policy or to recommend its abandonment. I must content myself, therefore, with its naked announcement.

"The United States has heretofore and now reserves to itself by means of protective tariffs a large measure of the commerce incident to supplying the needs and wants of its eighty million people. That which it yields to others it yields, with few and unimportant exceptions, to all on equal terms, and gives no preference to any country or to any people. The few carefully guarded exceptions only emphasize the policy, and the slight advantage granted the Republic of Cuba but evidences man's natural regard for his offspring, and does not mark the inauguration of a new policy.

"The United States offers the product of its soil, of its mines, of its forests, of its fisheries, and of its factories, to all the world on equal terms. It grants no export bounty and imposes no export duty. The Constitution of the United States insures to all of earth the right to buy in our markets on equal terms with ourselves. Whoever will pay the most gets our products. As a selling nation the United States contributes more to the international commerce of the world than any other country on the map and more than one-eighth of the aggregate.

"The United States consumes of the product of other countries more than two and one-half millions per day, and thus contributes to international markets one-ninth of the grand aggregate. This contribution, barring a dozen or so minor articles, the United States thus far has granted to all on equal terms. Its tariff duties, imposed for purposes of protection, as well as those imposed for purposes of revenue, are equal as between those countries which protect their markets and those which make their markets free.

"I hope it will not be considered out of place to add that the United States is consistent with itself in that it criticises no nation for levying duties, be they ever so high, when levied either for purposes of protection or for purposes of revenue, provided only they are made to rest no more severely upon us than upon others. The United States only asks the right to buy in foreign markets on the same terms as her commercial competitors, and the right to sell in all markets on terms as favorable as any.

"For two or three years past certain of our people have expressed fears lest the United States will be involved in tariff wars. I am glad that the record justifies the statement that the United States has never yet levied retaliatory tariffs. I can therefore assure you, and our own people as well, that the world will never be involved in tariff wars or retaliatory legislation so long as the United States pursues its present policy and other countries do not discriminate against those who do not discriminate against them."

The seventh session of the Congress ended to-day. Its eighth session will meet in Berne, Switzerland, five years hence. The final meeting resulted in the re-election of all of the officers of the permanent commission of the congress; the addition of four additional members to the permanent commission from the American section, and the appointment of two additional members from Germany.

The American quota on the permanent commission is now nine. The names added to-day were Paul Morton, Secretary of the Navy; George W. Stevens, President of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad; Charles M. Hays, Second Vice President and General Manager of the Grand Trunk, and Frank Barr, Third Vice President of the Boston and Maine Railroad.

The delegates witnessed a cavalry drill and rough riding exhibition by the Seventh Cavalry at the Fort Myer barracks in the afternoon.

FIGHT TULL SUIT ORDER.

Equitable Counsel Take Steps to Have Argument on Vacating It.

With Superintendent Hendricks of the State Insurance Department out of town and Samuel Untermyer, leading counsel for James H. Hyde, at his Yonkers residence over Sunday, there were few developments in the Equitable Life Assurance controversy yesterday. Alexander & Colby, counsel for the society, applied to Justice Bischoff in the Supreme Court for an order to show cause why the order compelling James H. Hyde, James W. Alexander, and Gage E. Tarbell to appear in the Supreme Court to-morrow for an examination before trial in the Tull suit for an accounting of the Equitable surplus should not be vacated. The order is returnable on Thursday.

John D. Crimmins, in an interview by telephone from his country place in Stamford, said yesterday that in the earlier activities of the Crimmins policy holders' committee, he had said something to Frank H. Platt, the committee's counsel, about contributions for its expenses. Mr. Platt answered, Mr. Crimmins declared, that the expenses would all be taken care of satisfactorily.

Gage E. Tarbell, Second Vice President of the Equitable Society, who is in charge of the agency force, is sending out a letter to the agents congratulating them on the work they have done since the controversy in the society has been in progress. Mr. Tarbell says that in April 1,000 more policies were written than in the preceding April, and that the paid business of the first four months of 1905 is $5,000,000 ahead of that for the first four months of 1904.

Changes on the New York Central.

A number of changes in the time of trains on the New York Central Railroad, to take effect to-day, were announced yesterday in accordance with the usual Spring custom. The Second Empire, announcement of which has already been made, will make its first run to-morrow. One important change is that of Train No. 17, the Detroit and Chicago Limited, which has heretofore left New York at 4 P. M., but will on the new schedule leave at 4:30 P. M. On the new schedule the road will have 906 passenger trains, and when the Summer trains are put on about the middle of June, 40 will be considerably more than 1,000 [illegible]

WILL RENEW TAX FIGHT.

Corporations, Preparing for Defeat, to Raise New Issues.

Fresh litigation is planned to defeat the purposes of the franchise tax law if, as expected, the United States Supreme Court upholds its constitutionality in the test action now pending. New points are likely to be raised by the public service corporations affected with a possibility that the entire fight, which has dragged for five years through the courts, will have to be repeated.

This new turn of affairs became known yesterday when Controller Grout expressed doubt whether the city would be able to collect the $20,000,000 or more due in these taxes even when the Supreme Court decision is rendered:

"It would be a good thing for the city if the corporations would pay their franchise taxes if the Supreme Court decides against them, as it is almost certain to do," said the Controller yesterday, "but it is too much to hope for. There are other points on which the companies are preparing to fight, and a repetition of the entire litigation is threatened. Now the companies want to have their car license fees and the charges against them for repaving between their tracks deducted from the sums charged against them for franchise taxes, and we decline to do so. On this point, and on other points concerning similar charges, new litigation is threatened.

"When the first franchise taxes were imposed the street car companies of Buffalo made a demand to have their car license fees and like charges deducted from the amounts of their taxes. The matter went to court, and it was decided that the Buffalo companies were entitled to these deductions, and on the strength of this decision the companies here are making like demands.

"Conditions in New York, however, are vastly different, and I believe that the car license fees here will be held to be rental for the use of the streets, as also will be the percentages which the companies are compelled to pay to the city out of their gross receipts, and will not be held to be in any way a tax on the franchises of the companies as real estate. However, the raising of such a point and the fighting out of the issue in the courts would mean the delay of several months, or even years, to the city in collecting the taxes due."

Of the total sum due the City of New York in taxes on franchises as real estate the New York City Street Railway, as the successor to the Metropolitan and the controller of its subsidiary lines, owes more than $6,000,000. The Manhattan Elevated system is in arrears nearly $5,000,000, and the various lighting companies are $3,000,000 and more in arrears. None of these companies has paid its franchise taxes since the law became operative, six years ago, and the arrears have been rapidly increased by the addition of 7 per cent. interest to their tax bills.

AMBULANCE FOR INK STAIN.

Beggar, in the Meantime, Reaps Harvest of Pennies.

A crowd gathered around the derelict of humanity as he sat on the curb at the corner of Third Avenue and Third Street. Apparently he was ill, for he was deathly pale, and a big red stain was on the pavement in front of him.

"Poor fellow!" said the sympathetic citizen, "he's bleeding to death. Why doesn't some one call an ambulance?"

The derelict of humanity looked up and smiled feebly. That smile went to the heart of another sympathetic bystander.

"You fellows stand around gaping. Why doesn't somebody do something? Is there no charity, no fellow-feeling among men? You ought to be ashamed of yourselves! I'll call the ambulance myself."

The sympathetic citizen stamped off to the nearest drug store, talking aloud about "the time some people take to make up their minds." The derelict of humanity gathered up the pennies in his hat and said, feebly:

"Is dat feller gone to call an amb'lance?"

When he was informed that this was so, the human derelict developed wonderful energy. He shuffled away with the Third Avenue crowd. Presently the ambulance came clanging from Bellevue Hospital. Dr. Drury jumped off with his surgical case in hand.

"This way, doctor," said the sympathetic citizen. "Get out, you loafers. Don't block the way if you have no other regard for the poor fellow's life."

He stopped speaking as he reached the curb. The doctor looked at the wet stain on the pavement.

"Red ink," said he, and his eyes challenged those of the sympathetic citizen.

STABBED HIMSELF ON STAGE.

Man Attempted Suicide Beside a Woman Who Was Reciting.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., May 13.—An attempt at suicide was made last night by David Leahey, a laborer, in a crowded hall in Glendale, a little village in the town of Stockbridge.

During a recitation Leahey walked to the stage, mounted it, and took a position beside a young woman who was reading. Holding aloft a large jacknife, he exclaimed, "There is no one to blame but myself," and then stabbed himself three times in the neck. "Drink did it!" he said as he fell to the floor of the stage.

Immediately the audience was in confusion, and a dozen men and women fainted. Two men in the rear of the hall closed the doors and prevented a rush down the only exit to the street. Leahey's sisters, Mrs. Dennis Broderick of New Britain, Conn., and Miss Elizabeth Leahey, were in the audience.

Physicians called to attend the man found that the left lung had been pierced by the knife. His condition to-night is critical.

NEW HAVEN ROAD EARNINGS.

$417,224 Behind on Operation for Last Quarter.

NEW HAVEN, May 13.—A deficit of $417,224 for the quarter ended on March 31, 1905, was announced to-day in the quarterly report of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company. This is contrasted with a surplus of $115,473 for the corresponding quarter of 1904. The report says:

"This quarterly deficit of over $400,000, the first in the history of the company, is attributable to severe weather conditions and the burden imposed by the car service laws of New England."

The gross earnings were $11,099,210, an increase of $493,929 over the corresponding quarter of 1904. The operating expenses were $9,396,047, an increase of $767,430.

$460,000 SUIT AGAINST G. J. GOULD AND RAMSEY

Chicago Man Makes Claim for Buying Ohio Coal Lands.

TELLS OF 18,000-ACRE DEAL

Authorized to Prospect for Mines in 1902, He Says — Subpoena Awaits Financier.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, May 13.—Suit was filed today in the Circuit Court for $460,000 against George J. Gould, William E. Guy, and Joseph Ramsey, Jr., President of the Wabash Railroad. The plaintiff is John S. Jones of Chicago, who alleges that he has performed services and acted as agent for the defendants.

Jones declares in the petition that in October, 1902, the defendants requested him to purchase for them 18,000 acres of coal land in the southern part of Ohio. The agreement, he says, was that he was to advance the purchase price and also the expensese incurred in prospecting for coal.

In conformity with this agreement, he alleges, during the latter part of 1902 he purchased the land in the southern part of Ohio, for which he paid $370,000, which sum, he alleges, the defendants agreed to repay. He expended $90,000 in prospecting and examining the title and general conditions.

As George J. Gould is expected in St. Louis soon the papers in the case and subpoenas were made out and given to Deputy Sheriff Louis Huber to serve.

Jones is represented legally by the firm of Boyle, Priest & Lehmann and George W. Easley of St. Louis. William Buerry of Chicago is also of his counsel. The suit is returnable to the June term of Circuit Court.

Second Gift of Kind at Door of Pastor Loch.

The Rev. Jacob W. Loch, pastor of the German Evangelical Lutheran Church, in Schermerhorn Street, Brooklyn, stumbled over a baby in the hall of the parsonage as he went out to post a letter a little after 9 o'clock last night.

Pastor Loch thought he had tripped over an ordinary bundle. Then the parcel began to emit sounds, and he realized that a baby had been left at his door in the same manner as was done three years ago. At that time it was a girl, and a note requested that it be given good care. This time it was a boy, and had managed to get into the hall.

Eugene Daly, a neighbor of Pastor Loch, placed the baby last night in care of the city nurse. The boy seemed healthy and well cared for, was about two months old, and was comfortably dressed. Pastor Loch is known in the neighborhood as a person with a tender heart and great love for children.

WESTERN HEART IS WARMER.

Miss Booth Declares Field Easier Than That in New York.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 13.—Miss Eva Booth, Commander of the Salvation Army, arrived in Chicago from New York at 10 o'clock this morning, and spent most of the day in her rooms at the Wellington Hotel.

"The Western heart is warmer and easier to reach than that of the New Yorker," she said. "I have seen but little of the city as yet, but I am sure there is a fine field for our work here, and it is being well received by the classes we wish most to reach."

Miss Booth hopes that a building similar to that being erected in New York at a cost of $70,000 for assistance of working women may be founded here.

"Just Like a Woman," Said Owner—Left $1 for Honest Conductor.

Special to The New York Times.

ALTOONA, Penn., May 13.—While remembering her bouquet when she left the Pennsylvania Railroad train here to-day, Mrs. D. B. Speche of Kantner, Somerset County, forgot her handbag containing $4,400. William Wherry, the conductor, found the bag on a car seat and left it with the station master, to whom Mrs. Speche applied later.

"It's all here," she said, coolly examining the contents.

Her husband, she explained, had given her the money and some papers to take care of.

"Just like a woman to lose them," she remarked as she left, after handing $1 to the station master as a reward for the honest conductor.

REBEL AGAINST A CIRCUS.

East End Pittsburgers Object to Its Proposed Camping Ground.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, May 13.—The fashionable residents of the East End have rebelled against the circus.

Judge James S. Young this morning granted a preliminary injunction restraining Director of Public Safety Harry Moore from issuing a permit to the circus agents for exhibiting their show on a lot belonging to Matilda McConnell, on Winebiddle Avenue, Twentieth Ward.

The bill in equity was filed by Catherine A. Hamilton and other residents of the Twentieth Ward against the City of Pittsburg, Harry Moore, and Matilda McConnell. It is contended that the show at that point will constitute a public nuisance and a menace to public health.

CIGARETTE CAUSES NOISE.

Elevated Passenger Wouldn't Put It Out—Whistles for Police.

The screeching of the motorman's whistle on a north-bound Sixth Avenue elevated train brought two policemen on the run to the Forty-second Street station early yesterday morning. The stragglers near the corner became greatly excited and ran up the station steps to see what the wild whistling meant. It turned out that a man who wanted to smoke refused to put out his cigarette, and the guard thought the best way to discipline him was to call the police.

The obstinate smoker sat in the second car and blew pretty rings—which, however, did not appeal to the guard's aesthetic sense. The man in the uniform told the smoker to stop, but the smoker smoked on. The warning was repeated with as little effect, and then the whistling began.

All the way from Thirty-eighth Street to Forty-second it kept up. A roundsman and a patrolman were waiting on the platform when the train drew up at Forty-second Street.

"What's the matter—murder?" asked the Roundsman of a guard.

"No; man won't stop smoking inside the car."

"Do you mean to say you whistled and brought us up here to put out a cigarette?" exclaimed the policeman.

"No, but to put out the man who won't put out the cigarette."

The smoker heard of his approaching removal and said:

"Oh, I'll put it out now—you needn't bother the police."

The police let the smoker stay, but they talked as if they would like to arrest the motorman and the guard. As it was nobody was arrested and the train rolled on.

GIRL SHOT AT THREE TIMES.

Attempt to Kill Her Mystifies Intended Victim at Wilmington.

Special to The New York Times.

WILMINGTON, Del., May 13.—Miss Mabel E. Vansant, whose home is at 408 East Seventh Street, is greatly alarmed over a mysterious attempt made to kill her.

While she was sitting in the front room of her home a bullet crashed through a window, passed within a few inches of her head, and buried itself in the wall on the opposite side of the room. Before she could move another bullet followed. A third shot was fired as she dropped to the floor to escape injury. The fusillade was then stopped.

Miss Vansant dashed down stairs, thinking that her mother might have been injured, but Mrs. Vansant knew nothing of the affair, and declared that she had not heard the shots.

The bullets had been fired from the rear of the Vansant home. The police have been unable to find a clue to the person who fired at her. The young woman is unable to give any reason for the attempt on her life.

GRIEF CAUSES HIS DEATH.

Corani Was First Stage Director of Metropolitan Opera House.

ST. LOUIS, May 13.—The body of Henry De Courtney Corani, aged fifty-six, the first stage director of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, was buried this afternon in Wesleyan Cemetery, with Masonic ceremonies.

Friends of Corani believe his death was due to grief over the death of his sister, Mme. Ellena Corani, a vocalist of note, who was associated with him in the Corani Conservatory of Music of this city. She died a year ago, and his health failed from that time. For several months it had been his habit to sit by the window of his home playing mournful airs on his violin, and he constantly talked of his sister.

He was a native of Italy, where he received his musical education.

BOY SAVES COMPANION.

Heel Caught in Track and Engine Coming When He Pulled Him Free.

Special to The New York Times.

ORANGE, May 13.—All Orange is talking to-day of the bravery of Joseph Weber, the nine-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Weber of 44 North Park Street, East Orange, who at the risk of his life yesterday afternoon saved his playmate, George Emmons, ten years old, from death under an Erie Railroad locomotive at Brighton Avenue. Young Emmons is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Emmons of Springvale Avenue, East Orange.

He and young Weber were crossing the Erie tracks at Brighton Avenue late yesterday afternoon when Emmons got the heel of his shoe wedged between the rail and the edge of the planking on the crossing. Weber started to unlace his comrade's shoe, and at that moment an engine rounded the curve at North Park Street and bore down on them. It was too late for the engineer to stop. Emmons tugged frantically to free himself, but to no avail. Then it was that Weber braced himself against the rail and, by main strength, succeeded in pulling his companion's foot out of the shoe. Together they rolled down the embankment and the next instant the engine thundered past.

STRIKE COUNCIL FAILS; MORE TROUBLE LIKELY

Owners and Teamsters Fail to Agree on a Peace Plan.

MAYOR DUNNE DISCOURAGED

Sees No Prospect of a Settlement—President Shea of the Union Threatens to Tie Up the Whole City.

CHICAGO, May 13.—The strike of the teamsters is expected to spread rapidly during the next week. At a meeting held to-night, being the Teamsters' Joint Council, which is the governing body of the local unions of the teamsters, and representatives of the Team Owners' Association, the latter informed the representatives of the teamsters that the condition of their business made it necessary for them to make deliveries to houses which had been boycotted by the union, and that they would do so next week, heedless of the fact whether or not a strike existed at such places.

The Council was urged to agree to this procedure, and avert a general strike. After an extended debate among its members the teamsters' council decided that it would not agree to the delivery of goods to any of the boycotted houses by union teamsters, and that strikes would be called whenever a man was discharged for refusing to deliver goods.

The drivers demand a flat increase of $10 a month. Under the agreement which expired May 1 drivers received $75 and helpers $65. The scale submitted specified $85 for drivers and $75 for helpers.

The dealers sent word that under no condition would the increase be made. Notice was also served on the drivers that they would be called upon this week to make deliveries of ice to the boycotted houses. Shea was defiant most of the day.

"I've a good mind to tie up the whole city," he exclaimed.

A shot fired in Dearborn Street, near the Fair Building, this afternoon, caused a panic among 1,000 persons and led to an attack upon a Wells-Fargo Express wagon. Bricks and stones were hurled, and a number of persons, among them several women, were trampled. A riot call brought policemen to the scene. The shot was due to the accidental discharge of a revolver, which fell from the belt of Deputy Sheriff T. T. Thompson, on the express wagon.

The death of Harry Grady at Provident Hospital to-day added another fatality to the list. Grady and his brother, William, were called to the rear of their home in the night and without apparent provocation shot down. A bullet entered Harry Grady's head, but his brother is recovering.

Mayor Dunne held a conference this afternoon with a number of advisers, seeking some method of bringing the strike to a close. He went home disheartened, and declared that he could see no prospect of a settlement.

Chauffeur of Calderwood Machine Arrested in Park.

Mrs. Charles A. Towne, the wife of Representative Towne, and two of her women friends were put to much inconvenience last night by the arrest of the chauffeur in charge of the automobile in which they were riding. The party was speeding through Central Park West when Bicycle Policeman Fitzgerald hailed the chauffeur and ordered him to slow up. The chauffeur did not stop, but, according to the policeman, went faster until he was going along at the rate of eighteen miles an hour. Fitzgerald chased the auto and overtook it at Seventy-seventh Street, where he placed the chauffeur under arrest.

It was then explained that the automobile was the property of J. L. Calderwood, the Brooklyn railroad man, who lives at 160 Columbia Heights, Brooklyn. He and Mr. Towne are warm friends.

When the party in the auto reached the West Sixty-eighth Street Police Station the chauffeur said he was Thomas F. McDonough of 1,344 McDonough Street. Mrs. Towne hurried to a telephone and called up Mr. Calderwood. Shortly after that Mr. Calderwood appeared at the station and left the auto as security for the chauffeur's appearance in court.

SOZODONT

LIQUID—POWDER—PASTE

This old and valuable dentifrice has successfully withstood the test of sixty years in the vast and varied markets of the world. The people of every nationality know SOZODONT; millions of them use it upon the prescription of the best dentists. As a tooth tonic it is unequalled; as a breath purifier it reigns supreme.

Unknown and untried dentifrices are tremendous factors in the destruction of the teeth. The employment of pumice, quartz, cuttle-fish bone, alum and acids is common in the manufacture of what are known as cheap dentifrices.

Can you afford to trifle with your teeth by using such stuff?

A VERY PROMINENT DENTIST SAYS ABOUT SOZODONT:

"From a careful study and investigation of dentifrices generally, I have not found any wash which contains so many admirable properties for the purposes intended as Sozodont. I have found Sozodont a specific deodorant, having antiseptic qualities that were a revelation to me in my clinical experiments. This preparation has the property of overcoming the acidity frequently found in the mouth, and in this particular I find Sozodont invaluable, taken in connection with the fact that it is not too alkaline, but sufficiently so to make the preparation not only distinctly beneficial as stated, but also agreeable to the patient. In mouths that have been treated with fillings, crowns or bridge work Sozodont acts as a specific in preserving such operations. The Sozodont Tooth Powder and Sozodont Tooth Paste seem to be equal to the Liquid in merit, and have been effectively and harmlessly employed by me in removing stains and in preventing depositions of calcareous deposits upon or between the teeth."

ELKINS TO DEMAND LAW ON CARRYING DYNAMITE

Senator Last Winter Predicted Wreck Like Harrisburg's.

TWENTY-THIRD VICTIM DIES

Company Says Rules Would Not Prevent Such Disaster—Unknown Dead Are Buried.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Senator Elkins declared to-day that he would introduce a bill at the approaching session of Congress to regulate the carrying of explosives on railroads. In the last Congress he introduced such a measure, but it got no consideration.

Mr. Elkins's bill provides for the transportation of high explosives of every character. It specifies that all explosives shall be securely packed; that each package shall be so labeled and numbered that it may be easily traced to its source, and that each label shall have the signature of an inspecting officer of the United States. Such explosives must be carried in closed box cars on trains in which there are no passengers. Not more than 2,000 pounds of explosives may be carried on any one car. Lots of less than twenty-five pounds are not subject to the provisions except as to labels.

The cars in which the explosives are carried must be labeled in big letters. A force of Inspectors is provided, to be under the jurisdiction of the Inter-State Commerce Commission and to have access to the places of all manufacturers of explosives.

The Inspector must sign the labels certifying that the explosives have been securely packed, so as not to be dangerous with careful handling, and is subject to heavy fine and imprisonment for collusion. The railways must refuse to receive explosives improperly packed.

In advocating his bill last Winter Senator Elkins declared that such an explosion as that at Harrisburg was liable to occur almost any time. Speaking of the matter to-day he said:

"I had been traveling in Europe prior to introducing the bill, and I observed that in Germany when a car of explosives was coming persons along the track would be warned of it. Each car of explosives bore flags and labels showing its character, and a wide berth was given. Such cars were placed on separate sidings and either carried alone or at the end of a train.

"I had been observing for years the carelessness with which explosives were carried in this country. At Grafton one night I slept in my car within two feet of a carload of dynamite.

"I have often been traveling on my own roads when I would find my car in a train right back of a flatcar loaded with Italians and dynamite. This stuff may be set off by concussion merely, and such disasters as that at Harrisburg are sure to follow unless more care is taken.

"The Pennsylvania has been more careful about handling explosives than any other road. Therefore, I consulted with the officers of that road and made up a bill covering the subject, but the ammunition dealers raised such a protest through Senators and Representatives that I did not press it in committee. I did warn them of the probability of just such a disaster as has occurred. I can pass my bill next session, I am sure."

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 13.—While officers of the Pennsylvania Railroad are still conducting their investigation of the wreck, a preliminary report was made public to-day. It shows that the car which caused death and suffering contained 20,000 pounds of blasting powder, designated as "Judson Rock Chief Powder."

It contained about 7 per cent. dynamite, and for this reason, experts say, the explosions must have been caused by heat instead of concussion. The powder was packed in 400 boxes of 50 pounds each. Each box contained four sacks, weighing 12½ pounds each.

These boxes were supposed to be carefully packed, and were certified as such by the firm that shipped the powder to the H. S. Kverbaugh Company, Incorporated, at Columbia. The preliminary investigation shows that the locomotive did not explode, and it will be ready for service within two weeks. The report says that the gas tanks under the cars did not explode.

In discussing the shipment of explosives, an officer of the Pennsylvania Railroad said to-day that the company experienced some trouble with shippers, especially from those in New England. To escape certain regulations for transporting exposives, they sometimes bill them as candy and merchandise. Such cases were prosecuted whenever caught.

Railroad regulations require the cars to be placed in the middle of the train and placarded. Neither of these precautions would prevent an accident such as occurred near Harrisburg.

HARRISBURG, Penn., May 13.—Frank W. Anderson of Pittsburg died at midnight in the Harrisburg Hospital. This makes twenty-three deaths from the collision. The body will be taken to Pittsburg to-morrow. His father, J. W. Anderson, has almost recovered.

The condition of Joseph Eberle of New York is serious. The other thirty-four patients at the hospital are doing well.

Among the missing is E. D. Edson, a New York lawyer, whose body is believed to have been consumed in the wreckage. Mr. Edson was on his way to Pittsburg with W. E. McMillan, President of the McMillan Lumber Company, who is at the hospital, seriously injured.

Edson and McMillan occupied opposite lower berths in the car Garnet. When the collision occurred Edson called to McMillan to hurry out of his berth and leave the coach. McMillan jumped from his berth and crawled through a window when he was hurled by the first explosion sixty feet over the river embankment. The force of the explosion shattered the coach, and what remained of it was consumed by the flames. W. H. Edson, a brother, of Dayton, Ohio; F. W. Smith, a brother-in-law, of New York, and other relatives were here to-day trying to find some clue.

The five unidentified victims were buried in a plot in the Paxtang Cemetery to-day with impressive ceremonies. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company will erect monuments to mark their graves. The Coroner will hold an inquest on Tuesday.

The funeral services to-day were in charge of the Rev. George S. Chambers, assisted by the Rev. Ellis N. Kremer, the Rev. Dr. D. M. Gilbert, and the Rev. Harry B. King, Harrisburg pastors. The combined choirs of the Pine Street and Market Square Presbyterian Churches sang.

Brief services were held at the grave. The honorary pall bearers were Mayor E. S. Gross, ex-Mayor Vance C. McCormick, Judges John F. Weiss and George Kunkel, Spencer C. Gilbert, Harry B. McCormick, James M. Cameron, and John S. Boyd.

One body was identified to-day as William H. Holmes, a traveling salesman, of Thirteenth and Berks Streets, Philadelphia, and was sent to his home. Holmes's father, who came here from Chicago, recognized the body by a peculiar formation of a leg, due to an accident. Holmes's mother and sister had been here since Thursday evening trying to find his body.

The watches found in the wreck were movement number 4,307,564, works, 10,782. It had repair numbers as follows: 42,822—M—S, 31,724—M—S, 1,576—R.

SHUBERT FUNERAL TO-DAY.

Theatrical Managers' Society Adopts Resolutions on His Death.

The Theatrical Managers' Association met yesterday morning and passed resolutions of condolence to be tendered the family of Samuel S. Shubert, the theatrical manager who died on Friday, a victim of the Harrisburg wreck. A committee was appointed to attend the funeral services, unless the family should decide to have them private.

The services will be held this morning at 9:30 o'clock at the family residence, 222 West Seventy-ninth Street. Only the immediate family will be present. Rabbi Silverman is to officiate.

The Equitable Life Assurance Society announced yesterday that Mr. Shubert was insured in that society for $50,000. The policy was taken out a year ago and Mr. Shubert had paid only one premium.

Edward D. Edson had offices at 25 Broad Street and lived with his wife and eighteen-months-old boy at 101 West One Hundred and Fortieth Street. He was graduated from Columbia College in 1895 and married two years ago. His wife was prostrated by the news that he probably perished in the wreck and last night two physicians were in attendance.

Edson's father, Rufus B. Edson of 68 West One Hundred and Fortieth Street, said last night that the family had no news concerning the young man. He said:

"My son Edward was the representative of many corporations here, among them being the Knickerbocker Trust Company and the International Mahogany Company. It was in connection with the affairs of the Mahogany Company that my son and Mr. McMillan had gone out of town."

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Senator Foraker was among the callers at the White House to-day. There is a big fight over a vacancy in the Chillicothe Internal Revenue District, each of the Ohio Senators having a candidate. Foraker recommends David H. Moore of Athens and Senator Dick insists upon the nomination of another man who is not agreeable to his colleague. If they could agree upon a candidate the President would appoint the man presented, but the differences seem irreconcilable, and the indications are that some time will elapse before an appointment is made.

Charles B. Bellinger, the United States District Judge who was to have tried the Oregon land fraud cases, died yesterday, and Attorney General Moody talked with the President to-day about appointing a successor. Senator Mitchell and Representative Hermann of Oregon are under indictment and were to have been tried before Judge Bellinger. Usually the Senators and Representatives are consulted about appointments of this character, but in view of the fact that Mitchell and Hermann will be tried before the court presided over by the man to be appointed the defendants will not, of course, be consulted in filling the vacancy.

The United States Marshal for the Portland District of Oregon, in which the land fraud cases will be tried, was removed to-day by order of the President on the recommendation of the Government's attorney. Charles J. Reed was appointed to succeed him.

LOOMIS INQUIRY BEGUN.

Answer to Bowen's Charges Submitted to the President.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—The conference between the President and Secretary Taft as to the Bowen-Loomis controversy resulted in the decision that the initiative in the presentation of the case should be given to Mr. Loomis.

Being notified of this fact Mr. Loomis to-day submitted a full statement in answer to all the charges growing out of the administration by him of the American Ministry at Caracas as transmitted to Secretary Taft by Minister Bowen. The latter is expected to arrive in Washington to-morrow and will immediately be called upon to present his side of the case.

Until the President, assisted by Secretary Taft, arrives at a final determination, it is understood that the details of the presentation will be withheld from publication.

SCARE CURED HICCOUGHS.

Five Days' Attack Ended When Hospital Was Mentioned.

After hiccoughing for five days, the prospect of a stay in a hospital frightened Henry Smith of 2,202 Eighth Avenue so badly that the hiccoughs left of their own accord. Smith is sixty-five years old. Tuesday morning he began to hiccough. He tried all the old-time remedies—holding his breath until he counted one hundred, drinking water while pinching his nostrils, walking backward, and everything else suggested to him, but his spasms grew worse and worse. Tuesday night he was hardly able to sleep, and Wednesday he could not sleep at all. Thursday he was so nervous and hiccoughed so frequently that his family urged him to send for a physician. He refused. Last night he was near nervous prostration and was hiccoughing twelve times a minute. He consented when he was again urged to summon a physician.

The physician told Smith that he had better go to the hospital, and one of his children ran to a drug store and telephoned for an ambulance. When Smith learned what had been done, he paled and said he wouldn't go to a hospital for all the money on earth. He was badly frightened. By the time the ambulance arrived from J. Hood Wright Hospital with Dr. Dowling in charge, Smith's scare had cured him of his hiccoughs. That, at least, was Dr. Dowling's diagnosis of his case, and Smith remained at home. Since Tuesday morning Smith lost twelve pounds in weight.

POLICEMAN LIFTED WATCH.

But Didn't Know It—Chain Caught on Buttons as Fat Man Jostled Him.

Albert Biek of Sixth Street, Woodside, L. I., is a portly man of considerable girth, and so is Policeman Conroy of the East Twenty-sixth Street Station. Biek left a north-bound Third Avenue elevated train at Thirty-fourth Street yesterday afternoon. In leaving the platform he brushed against Policeman Conroy, whose back was toward him.

A little later Biek started to look at his watch. It was gone.

Jumping back on the train, he reported the loss to Conroy, and asked him to hold the train.

"I can't hold the train," Conroy said. "The best thing you can do is to report it to the station, and if it is lost the police will try and get it for you."

"But the police haven't the watch," Biek kept repeating.

The argument kept up until the Forty-seventh Street Station was reached. By that time he had calmed down, and was induced by Conroy to leave the train and go to the East Fifty-first Street Station to report his loss.

Conroy had more room on the platform after Biek left. He turned half way about and seated himself on a bundle of papers.

SANTA FE PROSECUTION MAY INVOLVE MORTON

Possible That Officers Will Be Sued After He Quits Cabinet.

THE PRESIDENT TO DECIDE

Attorney General Would Confine Rebate Proceedings to the Corporation, but Harmon Takes Different View.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—"As I have said before, I am going to resign from the Cabinet in the Fall," said Secretary Paul Morton to-day, meeting several newspaper men in the corridors of the Navy Department. "But there is absolutely no truth in any reports of friction between the President and myself. I entered the Cabinet with the understanding that I should not be called upon to stay in it permanently, and by next Fall the time will have come when I can properly get out of it and attend to my private business."

This statement of Mr. Morton's was made immediately on his return from the White House. Earlier in the day he had pooh-poohed the rumors of his resignation, and had told inquirers there was nothing in them. When he got back from the White House he saw the newspaper men standing together in the corridor, and walked up and contributed the information above quoted without waiting to be asked.

From these facts the assumption has gained ground that Mr. Morton's announcement was made by advice of the President. One reason for this advice appears in the report that Attorney General Moody has turned over to Mr. Roosevelt the rebate case of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé, Mr. Morton's old railroad. He has, it is reported, invited the President to decide whether the action taken in the case shall extend to prosecution of the officers of the company or be confined to proceedings against the corporation.

On this point Mr. Moody, it is reported, disagrees with Judson Harmon, the special counsel who has been employed on the case. Mr. Harmon, who is an ex-Attorney General, takes the ground that the only course to be taken is the prosecution of the officers. Mr. Moody has been of opinion that action against the corporation will be enough.

Feeling that the matter is too important for him to settle, and perhaps also because Mr. Harmon has asked that the President be consulted, Mr. Moody has, it is reported, turned over the papers to Mr. Roosevelt for decision on the question.

This sheds further light upon Mr. Morton's announcement of his impending resignation. The President is believed to have taken the view that if the announcement came after the news leaked out that the Santa Fé prosecution was being considered by him, the two things might be linked in the public mind, and the supposition become current that Mr. Morton was resigning to face a prosecution.

ROBBERS TURNED ON LIGHTS.

Mistake Frustrated Plan to Rob Chapel of St. Mary's Hospital.

One of the nuns on watch duty in St. Mary's Hospital, in Jamaica, L. I., early yesterday morning was surprised when all of the electric lights in the building were suddenly turned on. She ran to the switch board to investigate, and found three strange men trying to turn out all of the lights.

She screamed for help, and the men ran down into the cellar. Dr. James O'Rourke was aroused and telephoned to Police Headquarters. In a few minutes half a dozen policemen arrived. They saw the three men run across a vacant lot and gave chase, but the men got away. An investigation showed that the men had gained entrance to the building by breaking open a window in the cellar. It is supposed they were trying to turn out the lights in the chapel, which contains many valuable articles in gold and silver, when they made a mistake and turned on all the lights.

RATE FIGHT IN TEXAS.

Threats of Retaliation If Railroads Enjoin Commission.

Special to The New York Times.

DALLAS, Texas, May 13.—Threats of special and retaliatory legislation if the railroad owners enjoin the Texas Railroad Commission from enforcing its new cotton rates are freely made.

Railroad Commissioner O. B. Colquitt says that he has been told on good authority in Fort Worth and Dallas that the railroads have decided to enjoin the Railroad Commission in their effort to prevent the reduction of the freights from going into effect. The Commission, he says, will meet the situation the best way it can.

It is reported in unofficial circles that if this action is taken by the railroads an effort will be made to have Gov. Lanham call a special session of the Legislature for the purpose of enacting into law the Commission's rate, including the enjoined cotton rates.

SPEEDING AUTO HALTED.

Jesse Lewisohn and John Considine Said to Have Been in It.

Jose Hovesse, a chauffeur, was arrested last night at West End Avenue and Ninety-sixth Street and will be charged in the Harlem Court to-day with running an automobile at a high rate of speed. In the car were three persons said to be John Considine of the Metropole Hotel, Jesse Lewisohn, and Clarence Loges. The car was said to belong to Considine, who gave cash bail for the chauffeur at the West One Hundredth Street Station.

Policeman Narney of the Bicycle Squad was at Ninety-eighth Street and West End Avenue at about 6 o'clock, when the automobile whirled past. Narney pursued and overtook the car at Ninety-sixth Street, where he arrested the chauffeur.

Butter Scarce in Mohawk Valley.

Special to The New York Times.

AMSTERDAM, N. Y., May 13.—Never before at this season has there been such a scarcity of butter in the Mohawk Valley as exists now. The few farmers engaged in making butter are asking in some instances forty cents a pound. Grocers say the shortage is due to the many milk stations established within a year and the increased amount of milk shipped to New York City.

FRANCE FEARS JAPAN DESIRES INDO-CHINA

Government Taking Measures to Defend the Colonies.

IS ASKING SPECIAL CREDITS

Meanwhile Japanese Anger with the Republic Grows Less and the Boycott Plan Is Abandoned.

PARIS, May 13.—The popular outburst at Tokio against France leads to the settled conviction here that Japan has territorial ambitions in Indo-China, which the French must sooner or later defend.

Although the Japanese officials disclaim any such intention this belief has taken firm hold of the French public and press, which unite in calling on the Government to adopt energetic measures to strengthen the defenses of Indo-China and to prepare for the contest which, it is asserted, will be inevitable when Japan's hands are freed from the Russian war.

The Government authorities, while not considering that trouble is imminent, share the public belief that it is essential to make speedy preparations for the defense of Indo-China, and accordingly large special credits are being asked for, the Ministers of Marine and War are considering large augmentations of the forces in Indo-China, and Admiral Fournier is planning a chain of coast defenses similar to those with which he has encircled France. The Admiral and representatives of the army and the colonies will probably proceed to Indo-China shortly, personally to inspect the requirements.

The sentiment that Indo-China is threatened has been slowly maturing into conviction. The first suspicions were aroused some months ago by the publication of a detailed plan of campaign, said to have been drawn up in the Japanese War Office, for the invasion of Indo-China. The denials which followed the publication of the plan have not changed the popular belief that Indo-China is menaced, and Foreign Minister Delcassé and other Ministers have advisced Parliament to give suitable attention to the requirements of the colony.

The recent agitation at Tokio against Admiral Rojestvensky's use of the waters of Indo-China has given new gravity to the question. Such conservative papers as the Temps and the Figaro say that Japan's action clearly discloses ulterior motives against the French colonies, while radical newspapers like the Patrie give sensational prominence to statements alleging that Japan is able to land troops above Hanoi, (capital of Tonquin,) sweep southward with practically no opposition, and simultaneously occupy Kamranh Bay and other unprotected coast points.

This doubtless is exaggerated, but it contributes to establish the belief that energetic measures are necessary to place the French colonies in a complete state of defense.

The reassembling of the Chamber of Deputies on Monday will, it is expected, renew the agitation the questions of Morocco and French neutrality. The notice given to Foreign Minister Delcassé by M. de Pressensé (Socialist) of his intention to interpellate the Government on its foreign policy promises to bring about a decisive issue between the Minister and the Socialists, who have been criticising his policy.

TOKIO, May 13.—A committee of the Constitutionalist Party called on Premier Katsura to-day and discussed the French neutrality incident. The Premier assured the committee that the Government was exerting its best efforts on behalf of the country, and explained the various steps taken.

The committee, reporting to the organization later, expressed satisfaction with the actions and attitude of the Government.

As a result of the recent developments the resolution introduced in the Chamber of Commerce providing for the boycott of French commerce has been withdrawn.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 13.—The danger of serious complications over the question of French neutrality is regarded as over for the present.

Throughout there has been a disposition to make allowance for the vexation and irritation manifested by Japan at a moment when the future of the war is staked upon the issue of the coming naval battle. Nevertheless, her willingness to assume a menacing attitude toward France upon the strength of the British alliance is regarded as being an eye-opener for the powers.

Despite the provocative tone of the British press, the British Government used its influence at Tokio in a pacific direction. However, the harsh things said of both France and Russia in the British papers have, so far as the Russian public is concerned, served still further to inflame the feeling of hostility toward Great Britain, which has always been regarded as Russia's arch enemy.

The Novoe Vremya announces that the incident is closed, adding:

"Japan wished to dictate to France in order to seal the union with Great Britain and then have in her pocket the apple of discord for use in a later attack on Indo-China."

MUNITIONS SENT VIA AMERICA.

Discovery That They Are Loading Shells for Japan Alarms Captains.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 13.—The Chronicle says:

"There is over a millions dollars' worth of munitions of war, contact explosive shells, unloaded, lying on the wharf on the Oakland side of the bay. The shells are consigned to Kobe, Japan, but were 'made in Germany.' The work of loading these shells began on two steamers, but was stopped to-day when the master of one vessel ascertained the character of the consignment.

"Many cars, sealed, and in bond from New York, arrived at Long Wharf within the last week or so. They were loaded with strong, iron-bound wooden cases shipped from Hamburg to Kobe, Japan, marked 'E. M. E. H. H., and invoiced as 'manufactures of metal.'

"When notified of the character of the goods he was loading, the Captain of the British steamer Heathdene sought the advice of the British Consul. Mr. Bennett sent Vice Consul Moore and the Captain to the office of Collector of Customs Stratton for a conference for the purpose of stopping the shipment of the shells, but this the Collector declined to do, as their transportation was not a violation of the neutrality laws."

American Sentenced in Default.

PARIS, May 13. — The Correctional Tribunal of the Seine to-day gave judgment in default in the case of Frank W. Hawley, an American, who was charged by a Mrs. Whistler with obtaining $10,000 under false pretenses, sentencing him to five years' imprisonment. Hawley, whose home is said to be near Rochester, N. Y., is believed to be in Cuba or Bogota.

KAISER CONSULTS CARDINAL.

Wants Mgr. Kopp to Help the Passage of the Prussian Mining Bill.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, May 13.—It is announced that Emperor William has summoned Cardinal Kopp, head of the Catholic Church in Prussia, for a consultation. I learn that the Emperor desires to obtain the advice of the Cardinal on the Mining bill now before the Prussian Landtag.

The passage of the bill is somewhat uncertain, and as Cardinal Kopp is a member of the Prussian House of Lords the Emperor wishes him to use his influence to secure a majority for the measure.

It is also said that the Emperor wishes the Cardinal to appoint a successor to Bishop Bentzler of Metz, who made himself obnoxious to the German Government owing to his attitude regarding the question of the burial of Protestants in communal cemeteries.

KAISER SNUBS ANTI-SEMITES.

Helps a Jew to Obtain a Commission in a Guard Regiment.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, May 13.—That Emperor William is opposed to anti-Semiticism is shown by an incident that has just come to light.

A young man named Goldschmidt Rothschild, a grandson of the late Baron Rothschild of Frankfort, after serving for a year in a guard regiment at Karlsruhe desired to obtain a commission as an officer, but the opposition to him was so strong that all his efforts failed.

The Emperor, on learning of this, appointed Herr Rothschild a Court Chamberlain. The officers' staff of the regiment took the hint, and Rothschild obtained his commission.

NEW ARCTIC EXPEDITIONS.

Mr. Champ and Dr. Fassig Both to Search for Anthony Fiala.

LONDON, May 13.—William S. Champ and Dr. Oliver L. Fassig started for Bergen, Norway, to-day to complete the details of the sailing of the steamer Terra Nova, which is going to the arctic regions to relieve the expedition headed by Anthony Fiala of Brooklyn, N. Y. The latter is on board the steamer America, fitted out by William Ziegler of New York for the purpose of attempting to reach the North Pole by way of Franz Josef Land.

The Terra Nova will, it is expected, leave Tromsoe in about a fortnight. Mr. Champ says the Terra Nova will proceed as rapidly as possible to Cape Flora, Franz Josef Land, where he expects to find the records of the Fiala expedition, and perhaps some members of that party. Information which Mr. Champ recently received shows that the ice conditions are more favorable than in 1904, when two attempts to relieve the America were abortive.

A second relief ship on which Dr. Fassig will be a passenger will proceed from Norway direct to Shannon Island and search the east coast of Greenland.

The Duke of Orleans leaves England in the coming week for Bergen, whence he will sail immediately for the polar regions with the object of scientific research. Incidentally the Duke may assist in the relief of the Fiala expedition.

TRIED TO KILL CZAREVITCH?

Nurse's Attempt Said to Have Been Balked by the Czarina.

PARIS, May 13.—The rumor on the Bourse to-day of an attempt on the life of the Russian Emperor was apparently the outgrowth of a dispatch to the Petit Journal from St. Petersburg saying:

"Society is agitated over a mysterious drama which has occurred at Tsarskoe-Selo. It is alleged that a nurse was about to put the infant heir to the Russian throne into a bath of boiling water when the Empress intervened in time to save the child."

The dispatch adds that all the domestic servants of the household have been dismissed.

IMPERIAL BRIDE'S GOWN.

Material Russian, Embroidery German, Dressmaking French.

BERLIN, May 13.—The wedding dress of Duchess Cecilia of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, who is to be married on June 6 to Crown Prince Frederick William, will be an international composition.

The Grand Duchess Anastasia, mother of the Duchess, bought the material, so-called cloth of silver, in Russia, for $2,400; it has been embroidered with wonderful garlands of silver by German needlewomen, and it has been made up by a famous dressmaker in Paris. The Court train is after the fashion of the one worn by the Empress Josephine at the time of her coronation, but modified by the recent Empire styles. The Crown Prince objected to puffed sleeves, and they have accordingly been abbreviated.

The Sultan of Turkey is sending to the Crown Prince and Duchess Cecilia a number of splendid rugs and porcelains. The bearer of these gifts will be Turkhan Pasha, the Sultan's representative at the wedding.

MINE SINKS ANOTHER SHIP.

British Steamer Sobralense Lost—28 Persons Drowned.

TOKIO, May 13.—The British steamer Sobralense, bound from Niu-Chwang for Kobe, struck a mine off Port Arthur yesterday and sank immediately.

Boats from Port Arthur rescued all the Europeans aboard, but it is believed that several of the crew and passengers were drowned. It is also believed that the steamer was inside the zone that ships have been warned to avoid.

LONDON, May 13.—A dispatch to Lloyds from Niu-Chwang says twenty-eight of the passengers and crew of the Sobralense were drowned.

Boats from Port Arthur saved sixty of those who were on board the steamer.

A SELF-ACCUSED GOVERNOR.

German Official Ordered Punishment Which Caused Negro's Death.

BERLIN, May 13.—Gov. Horn of the German colony of Togoland, West Africa, has filed with the Colonial Office a charge against himself of unfitness any longer to rule the colony.

He had occasion some time ago to punish a native soldier and did so according to the custom of the country by having him tied to a tree for several hours. Later the Governor reconsidered his order and instructed his Adjutant to ride as fast as possible and release the man, but in the meanwhile the negro had died as a result of exposure to the sun.

The Governor was so troubled by his act that he filed a charge against himself. This has been dismissed, but the Governor, who is now in Europe, will probably decline to return to Africa, and Count Zech is likely to succeed him.

AMERICAN MARRIES HINDU.

Our Vice Consul at Muscat Weds a Worker Among London's Poor.

LONDON, May 13.—Archibald Mackirdy, American Vice Consul at Muscat, Arabia, was married at St. Margaret's Church, Westminster, to-day to Olive Christian Malvery, an East Indian, who has spent five years working among the poor of London.

The Bishop of London officiated, and Mme. Calvé participated in the choral service. The bridesmaids were five East End flower sellers. The church was crowded with poor girls.

The bride, who was attired in an Indian wedding gown, was given away by Bishop Milne of Bombay.

Alleged Reason for the Arrest in Austria of Special Inspector.

In His Report Braun Declared the Officials Were Sending Undesirable Immigrants Here.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—President Roosevelt is manifesting particular interest in the case of Marcus Braun, a Special Inspector of the United States Immigration Service, who is having trouble with officials of the Austro-Hungarian Government, whom he charges with tampering with his official mail.

Inspector Braun complained of his treatment to Ambassador Storer, who cabled yesterday to the State Department some details of the case. The cablegram was referred to the Department of Commerce and Labor, with a request for a statement regarding Mr. Braun's official status.

Inspector Braun has made several reports to the Bureau of Immigration as a result of his inquiries in Europe. One of these was received last Autumn and another only a few days ago.

The first was sensational in its statements. It contained allegations, backed by affidavits, regarding the Austro-Hungarian Government's efforts to foist upon this country immigrants who might not be desirable from the point of view of the American people. The charge was specifically made that the Austro-Hungarian Government was paying the steamship companies a large sum each year to bring immigrants to this country and also that the immigrants were being urged not to become American citizens.

The reports of Inspector Braun have not been published lest the statements they contain might cause friction between the United States and the Austro-Hungarian Government.

The President to-day called for the reports of Inspector Braun and will go over them himself in connection with the consideration of the Inspector's present difficulty.

Tampering with the mail of an official in a foreign country is a serious matter, and there is no disposition on the part of the officials of the Department of Commerce and Labor to treat the complaint of Inspector Braun lightly.

PAUL JONES'S LAST JOURNEY.

Body to be Taken from Paris to Warship on July 4.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Acting Secretary Loomis has cabled to Gen. Porter, ex-Ambassador at Paris, that Admiral Sigsbee's squadron will sail from this country on June 20 for France, and that the department approves Gen. Porter's plan to have the remains of John Paul Jones transferred from the American Church in Paris to the squadron on July 4 with all proper state.

Mr. Loomis presented to the President to-day E. Wickersheimer, an eminent engineer of Paris, who is in Washington as a delegate to the International Railway Congress. Mr. Wickersheimer was the engineer in charge of the excavations through which the remains of Paul Jones were discovered.

GERMAN-AMERICAN TREATY.

Washington Government Willing to Negotiate Trade Convention.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, May 13.—The Government reiterates that the commercial treaty between the United States and Germany has been neither formally nor informally denounced. It is further declared that Ambassador von Sternburg has received assurances from President Roosevelt and the State Department that the United States is prepared to negotiate a reciprocity treaty with this country.

This news, which has just been received here, greatly pleases the officials, who express their entire willingness to make every possible concession to the United States that is not incompatible with German interests.

The German Government, however, will endeavor to secure some modification of the American invoice system, which has proved so obnoxious to German exporters.

INCREASES AUSTRIAN DUTIES.

New Tariff Bill Passed by Lower House of Reichsrath.

VIENNA, May 13.—The Customs Tariff bill, originally brought forward in 1903, which passed its second and third readings in the lower house of the Reichsrath last night, bears equally on all importations from every country without discrimination. It was framed as much from a political point of view as from that of purely commercial and industrial affairs.

The general effect of the bill is to increase imposts all along the line.

REJECTS KALEIEFF'S APPEAL.

Senate Refuses New Trial for Grand Duke's Slayer.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 13.—The Senate, sitting as a Court of Cassation, this afternoon refused the petition of Ivan Kalieff, who assassinated the Grand Duke Sergius at Moscow, for a new trial.

The appeal was based on the ground that Kalieff killed the Grand Duke as Governor General of Moscow and not as a member of the imperial family, the Russian law inflicting the death penalty only for high treason in the murder of a member of the imperial family.

Kalieff can now implore pardon, but his lawyer says he will not do so, and therefore Kalieff will be hanged in a fortnight.

TO HALVE HAITIAN DEBT.

Bill to Reduce All Domestic Bonds Is to be Adopted.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, May 13.—The Minister of Finance has introduced in Parliament a bill providing for the reduction by fifty per cent. of all bonds of the domestic debt.

The measure will undoubtedly be adopted, in spite of the protests of certain foreign holders of domestic securities.

PRESIDENT ENDS DISPUTE.

Bureau of American Republics to Conduct Its Own Affairs.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—The President's attention having been attracted to the situation in the Executive Board of the Bureau of American Republics growing out of the effort to select a new chief clerk in place of W. C. Fox, promoted to be director, he has removed the cause of friction.

He directed to-day that a commission be issued forthwith to W. C. Wells, who was the original choice for the place of a majority of the board, and that henceforth the members be allowed to conduct the administration of the bureau according to their own rules and without interference on the part of this Government.

WITH A FILIPINO CLUB WOMAN BEAT BURGLARS

"Home Rule," Inscription on Mrs. Kohn's Weapon.

TWO ROBBERS GOT AWAY

Third Attacked Mrs. Kohn's Father with Knife, but Roundsman Got Him After Fight in Midair.

The inscription "Home Rule" on a Tagalog war club which hung among a group of trophies on the dining room wall in the apartment of Emerich Kohn, at 1,263 Madison Avenue, had been a dead letter until yesterday, when Mrs. Kohn, wielding that primitive weapon, put to rout a gang of bold burglars who invaded her home before daylight.

Mr. Kohn is a lawyer whose office is at 320 Broadway. He ran for State Senator against Senator Frawley last year. Mr. Kohn's brother, Samuel E. Kohn, and his father-in-law, Max Roth, live in the apartment. The house in which they live is an old-fashioned one, and the Kohns occupy two floors.

The windows of their dining room open on a fire escape which leads from an alley running to One Hundred and Eighth Street. There were four burglars in the gang. Three climbed up this fire escape and pried open the dining room windows, while one was left below in the alley to keep a lookout.

The room occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Kohn adjoins the parlor on the third floor. Mr. Kohn's brother and Mr. Roth occupied a room adjoining the dining room on the floor below and they were first awakened by the thieves. Mr. Roth started for the dining room as soon as he heard the noise. As he opened the door, he discovered three men at work by the light from a dark lantern hurriedly stripping the sideboard of silverware, and putting the loot into a sack. All the men wore masks.

Mr. Roth dashed into the room and hit one of the burglars a vigorous blow on the head. The next moment the other two men came to the assistance of their confederate, and the old man found himself engaged in an uneven battle. In the struggle the dark lantern was thrown to the floor and extinguished. Mr. Roth finally was knocked down and stunned and then the three men directed their efforts against Mr. Kohn's brother, who in the meantime had hurried to the room.

The struggle began anew in the darkened room. Furniture was overthrown, and this, with the cries of the younger Kohn, aroused the lawyer and his wife, who hastened downstairs. In the meantime Mr. Kohn's brother had been knocked out by the burglars, who then prepared to make away with their booty.

At the door of their room Mr. and Mrs. Kohn met one of the burglars. The lawyer jumped at him, and Mrs. Kohn ran down to the dining room. As she entered she saw two men at the sideboard and her father's prostrate form on the carpet. Without hesitating she rushed into the room and snatched the Filipino trophy from the wall.

She rushed at the two burglars and struck at their heads until the men, beaten back, rushed with their sack to the window and began to climb down the fire escape. While they were so engaged the third burglar, chased by the lawyer, ran into the room and made for the window.

Midway in the room Mrs. Kohn met him with her ready club and drove him into a corner by the sideboard. The burglar at bay picked up a large carving knife from the sideboard, and rushed for the window again. Here he encountered Mr. Roth, who had revived, and who barred his way while he shouted for the police. The burglar lunged at the old man repeatedly and stabbed him in the left arm and the left side until Roth sank to the floor. The burglar followed his confederates through the window and down the fire escape.

By this time the cries of the Kohns had attracted the attention of Roundsman Monahan of the East One Hundred and Fourth Street Station. He climbed up the fire escape just in time to meet the fleeing burglar on the second floor landing.

The fugitive did not wait for the policeman to open hostilities, but went at him with his knife. The two grappled in midair in the darkness, but the Roundsman succeeded in getting in a blow with his night stick on the side of the burglar's head, knocking him senseless. Monahan picked him up, threw him over his shoulder, and carried him up the fire-escape ladder to the next floor, where he tossed him into the dining room through the open window. In the dining room Roth, weak from the loss of blood, was sitting in a chair. Mrs. Kohn still stood in an attitude of defense, club in hand.

The burglar quickly came to, and in his pockets were found several knives and forks belonging to Kohn. He gave his name as Samuel Lewis, said he was nineteen years old, and a tailor. He wouldn't say who his confederates were. When arraigned before Magistrate McAvoy in the Harlem Court later he was held in $2,500 bail for examination. When Kohn had made an examination of his flat he told the police that the burglars had taken away with them a considerable quantity of silverware, a valuable watch, and some jewelry.

SUES BROKER FOR $10,000.

Miss Cavanagh Says Van Vleck Promised to Marry Her.

Winifred May Cavanagh, twenty-one years old, has begun an action in the Supreme Court against William D. Van Vleck, a broker, for $10,000 damages. She alleges breach of promise of marriage. Mr. Van Vleck lives at the Hotel Astor, is about fifty years old, and is a member of several clubs.

Miss Cavanagh's attorneys, Kremer & Kremer, have a large number of letters which they say Mr. Van Vleck wrote to Miss Cavanagh. One letter, written on paper of the New York Athletic Club, is as follows:

"Dear Baby: The old stocks did not do well to-day, everything was down, including Canadian Pacific. But do not lose heart, Winnie, they will all go up again and you will have money to burn. Money burns easily, and it will soon go. Was at the bank to-day, and have arranged to introduce you there to-morrow."

Philip J. Britt, attorney for Mr. Van Vleck, will set up a general denial of the statements made in Miss Cavanagh's complaint.

EARRINGS TORN FROM CHILD.

Girl's Ear Hurt—Peddler, Chased by Crowd, Arrested.

David Epstein, eighteen years old, an east side soda water peddler, was arraigned yesterday morning in the Tombs Court charged with having taken two old-fashioned earrings from Lena Andriole, four years old, in the building at 314 Mott Street. The police say that he tore one of the child's ears in the operation.

Epstein ran toward Prince Street, pursued by a large crowd, in which was the girl's mother. The crowd caught up with Epstein at Prince Street just as Detective Sergeants Deevy and Gallagher arrived. The detectives had some trouble in getting Epstein away, the crowd being angry and saying after that the prisoner ought to be lynched.

MAIL YOUR LETTERS EARLY.

Postmaster Willcox Suggests Plan for Expediting Business.

Postmaster Willcox yesterday made an appeal to business men not to permit their correspondence to accumulate throughout the day to be mailed in a mass at closing time.

"It is generally regarded," he says "as the most convenient business arrangement to sign the bulk of the correspondence in the afternoon and after the same has been copied to send it to the General Post Office in the evening. While I certainly do not wish to interfere in any manner whatever with the arrangements of the business community, it is my opinion that this practice could be modified in many instances to an extent which would permit of advance mailings during the day.

"If this were done it would greatly facilitate the work at this office and render possible a more prompt dispatch of the matter so mailed. The mail is dispatched as far as possible by the night trains, but this is only accomplished by most strenuous efforts and by working the clerks at a terrific pace. If but 25 per cent. of the more than 800,000 letters for delivery in other cities now received daily at the General Post Office between 6 and 8 o'clock in the evening could be deposited in the Post Office or even in the mail chutes before 2 or 3 o'clock in the afternoon it would contribute greatly to effecting a more satisfactory service by enabling the Post Office to cancel, distribute, and dispatch such matter to the trains before the hours of congestion."

TO DISCUSS BIBLE TOPICS.

Programme for the Convention of the American Bible League.

The programme for the three days' convention of the American Bible League on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of next week was announced yesterday. The sessions will be held morning, afternoon, and evening of Wednesday and Thursday. President William Phillips Hall will deliver an address Tuesday evening on the aims of the conference. Some of the other addresses will be as follows: "Bible Inspiration: Orthodox View," Prof. Luther T. Townsend; "Geological Confirmation of the Biblical History of Israel from Abraham to Exodus," Prof. G. Frederick Wright of Oberlin College; "The Miracle of Prophecy," the Rev. G. Kyle, Egyptologist, Philadelphia; "Abraham Demonstrated a Historical Character from Geography, History, and Archaeology," Prof. Robert Dick Wilson, Hebraist and Orientalist, Princeton Theological Seminary; "Effect of the Higher Criticism on the Ministry," the Rev. HOTEL FOR TIMES SQUARE.

Twelve-Story Structure to Cost About $300,000 Is Planned.

The improvements of one of the most prominent corners overlooking Times Square has just been announced. Timothy F. Paddell, owner of the southwest corner of Seventh Avenue and Forty-second Street, will erect there a twelve-story hotel.

Plans for the structure have been prepared by Architect Robert D. Kohn. It will have frontages of 50 feet on Forty-second Street and 100 feet on Seventh Avenue, with an "L" at the rear, the total area of the plot being about 7,000 square feet.

The new building will have an ornamental exterior of brick and marble, and according to present estimates will cost about $300,000.

The hotel will be planned exclusively for men's patronage. It will contain 150 rooms, 100 of which will have bathrooms adjoining. The ground floor will be given over to a café and a large restaurant.

A NOVELTY IN ADVERTISING.

"Fame" on the Methods Followed with The Times Building.

From Fame.

The rental agents of the Times Building, in Times Square, New York, are giving the new structure publicity in a manner of which few office buildings have yet secured the benefit.

To take a single column issued in THE NEW YORK TIMES on the 13th of April, there appeared a list of seventy-three tenants; underneath there was a paragraph headed "Good Company," which told that 279 applications for space had been declined because of the character of the business, since no tenants except those of recognized financial standing would be accepted. Underneath this was a paragraph headed "Time is Money" and telling the reader that "time saved in a live business will many times pay the rent of an office in a building where the elevators in front of the office door lead to the most central station of the Subway."

A paragraph headed "Highest Standard of Office Building" followed this with some reference to being unexcelled in location, construction, and convenience; another one headed "Daylight and Good Air" told of the difficulty in a great city to secure daylight and good air at the best location and that this building combines all these advantages, unexcelled by any other building; then followed two more paragraphs headed, respectively, "Construction" and "Electricity."

They are worth almost entire reproduction as models of advertising description. Under "Construction" we are told that the building is "absolutely fireproof; all structural work is of steel, so that the building obtains the best rate in the universal schedule of insurance companies; that the steel used weighs 3,650 tons; that there are three distinct systems of wind bracing in the frame; that it is the strongest steel structure of its height." Then, under "Electricity," we are told that the building exceeds every known structure in the number and variety of uses to which electricity is put; that it has "independent connections with three stations of the Edison Company, and while there is a large steam-heating plant installed for Winter use there will be no heat in the building of any kind during the five warm months of the year, thereby avoiding the possibility of heated rooms near flues."

All in all, taking up a whole column as it does, it certainly is an interesting piece of advertising to all who are interested in all phases of this new art, even if they have not yet become advertisers.

Greene's hunting party, now in the Sierra Madre Mountains, Mexico, 200 miles southwest of El Paso, say that the party has encountered plenty of big game and is having fine sport. JUDGE AND MAGISTRATE HEAR GRAFTING CHARGES

Harlem Police Court and Bellevue Mentioned.

McAVOY WILL INVESTIGATE

Justice O'Gorman Denounces System by Which Lawyers Obtain Accident Cases from Hospital.

In the Harlem Court yesterday, Henry Levy, a lawyer who has practiced in that court for eleven years, made charges that wholesale grafting exists there among the policemen of the court squad, and Magistrate McAvoy promised to have a rigid investigation made. In the Supreme Court, Justice O'Gorman censured the authorities of Bellevue Hospital for permitting the existence of the system of "ambulance chasing," out of which lawyers obtain damage suits for accidents.

Mr. Levy made his charges in connection with the case of John Pivarosik, who was charged with assaulting a boy.

"A complete system of grafting, your Honor," he said to Magistrate McAvoy, "exists in this court. Prisoners are steered openly to lawyers who have the favor of the officers in charge of the court squad, and as I am not one of the elect I am frequently put to great inconvenience to handle my clients' cases. Some lawyers, who have the entree at the gate of the bench inclosure, are admitted by the policeman on guard without question or difficulty, while when I appear at the gate I am closely and unnecessarily cross-questioned about every detail of my business within the inclosure, and every possible difficulty is put in my way.

"On two occasions when clients of mine have sent for me Sergt. McGirr, who commands the squad, has insulted me, calling me a grafter and declaring that he was in the court to stop grafting. Yet saloon keepers, Aldermen, and politicians in Harlem are allowed to enter the gate without the slightest question."

Magistrate McAvoy, in reply, said:

"When I came to this court I felt that there was something in the atmosphere that was not right. I have been waiting for something like this to be said to me, that I could take some action. If there is grafting in this court, and I can locate it, I am going to fight it and stamp it out, and no one concerned shall escape punishment if I can help it. My time is up in this court on the 15th inst., but, Mr. Levy, I will adjourn your case until next Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock, when I want every one concerned to be present, and we will go into this thing and find out the truth if it takes a month."

In the Supreme Court yesterday a cabman named Harrington asked permission to change the attorney of record in a suit which he has brought against the city for damages. His cab struck a hole in the pavement and Harrington was thrown from his seat, receiving injuries which necessitated his removal to Bellevue. While there, he said, a Mr. Reeves, who, according to the cabman, represented himself as an officer of the People's Legal Aid Society, visited him.

When he got out of the hospital and engaged a lawyer to bring a suit for damages, Harrington said that he found that such a suit had already been commenced in his behalf through Reeves, who said that he had secured from Harrington authorization to bring the suit. It was after learning these facts that Harrington asked the court to substitute his own attorney in place of the man who appeared as attorney of record. Evidence was introduced to the effect that Reeves was not a lawyer, but had turned the case over to a lawyer, who in turn had transferred it to another upon receiving $100 for getting the case. In deciding the case Justice O'Gorman said:

"He [Reeves] intimated that a failure to give him the case would cause friction with the [hospital] attendants, and considering his apparent authority and liberty he enjoyed in the building [Bellevue Hospital] in the presence of the attendants and others, it is not surprising that he succeeded in securing the patient's signature to a paper authorizing him to commence suit and fixing the attorney's compensation at 50 per cent. of the recovery.

"The toleration of such a practice, if it exists, is subversive of the rights of the patients, and a positive menace to the community. The motion for the substitution should be granted, and under the circumstances without terms."

Erie's New Robber-Proof Mail Car.

A steel, fireproof mail car is now at the International Railway Congress Exhibition at Washington. It belongs to the Erie Railroad and embodies the ideas of President Underwood of that line. Postmaster General Cortelyou and Fourth Assistant Postmaster General De Graw have examined the car and given it their hearty approval. The foreign railway representatives are taking great interest in the new product, which was built by the Standard Steel Car Company at Pittsburg. It is mounted on standard six-wheel trucks. Recent additions to the Erie's rolling stock also include a steel express and a steel baggage car.

Count Weeps as He Is Held for Theft.

Count Raggi Counti, the Austro-Italian nobleman who was arrested on Wednesday afternoon, after a chase in West Twenty-third Street, and charged with stealing a diamond brooch valued at $1,500 from a Twenty-third Street store, was examined before Magistrate Cornell yesterday morning in the Jefferson Market Court. Through his lawyer, Mark Alter, the Count waived examination. Bail was fixed at $3,000. The Count wept when told he had been held.

READ HER MIND, BUT ALAS!

Her $45, He Placed in Package to Grow, Withered and Faded Away.

A negro called at the boarding house of Mrs. Mary E. Johnson, 149 West Thirty-third Street, last Sunday afternoon, and asked for a room. In the conversation that ensued he remarked that he was the twin brother of the man who predicted the assassination of President McKinley.

Mrs. Johnson looked at him with awe and asked, timidly, if he was also a mind reader, and when informed that he was, begged him to read her future. The negro graciously complied. He told her she must be careful, as she had an enemy, and then, switching the forecast, said it was her lucky day, and she could make money if she only had some to start on. Mrs. Johnson fished out $45 and handed it to the stranger.

With many mysterious gestures and words that the woman had never heard before, he wrapped the money, or appeared to do so, in newspaper, then in cloth, and finally sewed the cloth tightly. After sprinkling salt and water on the package the negro told her to place it in the bosom of her dress and leave it there until the next day, when, upon removing it, she would find the cloth green in color and the money much increased in value.

The man left, promising to return the next day and take the room. Mrs. Johnson waited and then investigated the package. The $45 was not there. The police have arrested Edmond Emanuel Wilkins, thirty-six years old, of 222 West Sixty-fourth Street, on suspicion of being the man who applied for a room. When arraigned in the Jefferson Market Court yesterday he proved that he was at the Colored Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association when the robbery occurred.

Office Boy Admits Forging $125 Check.

Leon Schuls, though only seventeen, and an office boy, confessed yesterday in the Tombs Court to having forged a check for $125 and spending the proceeds. Leon boards with a family at 316 Madison Street, and has been in this country only two years. He worked for Baumer & Buck, manufacturers at 20 Lispenard Street. On April 14 he went to the Jefferson Bank, at Canal and Forsyth Streets, and presented a check for $125 apparently signed by M. Baumer of the firm. He got the money. Later when the canceled check was returned an investigation resulted in the arrest.

BLASTS INJURE BOULEVARD.

Hudson County, N. J., Sues Clinton Point Stone Company for $100,000.

John Griffin, County Counsel for Hudson County, N. J., has begun suit against the Clinton Point Stone Company to recover $100,000 for damage done to the Palisades by blasting at Weehawken and to the four-million-dollar County Boulevard which crowns the cliffs.

For some months the stone company has been blasting out the face of the Palisades at what is known as Blockhouse Point, made historic by "Mad Anthony" Wayne's attack on the British intrenched there in the Revolutionary struggle. The company has dug far into the rock, and has so undermined the boulevard that the road has caved in at the most picturesque point in all the length of the fourteen-mile drive.

The undermining threatens to destroy the road, and danger signals are displayed along the drive for more than half a mile on either side. The company has asked the county Board of Freeholders to consent to the entire destruction of the road at Blockhouse Point, and has agreed to pay for moving it back from the edge of the bluff.

The answer of the Freeholders is the suit which County Counsel Griffin has just started.

FOR CATHOLIC UNION.

First Convention of Federation of Societies Meets To-morrow.

The first annual convention of the New York County Federation of Catholic Societies, organized by Archbishop Farley a year ago at a large meeting in Carnegie Hall, will be held at Cathedral School Hall, 111 East Fiftieth Street, to-morrow evening.

The Federation proposes "to unite the Catholic laity in such a way that, while preserving strictly its autonomy, each Catholic society may communicate and co-operate with every other in developing public sentiment among Catholics; in taking concerted action when necessary; in refraining from needless or inopportune action or public expression of opinion; in uniting Catholics of various nationalities; in associating the clergy and laity so closely together that it will be possible for all to act together, under the advice of the hierarchy, and impossible for any section to speak or act in the name of all.

"The Federated Societies do not in any wise lose their individuality or autonomy, and the organization is absolutely non-political."

U. S. RUBBER TO GET RUBBER GOODS COMPANY

Will Acquire 67 Per Cent. of Manufacturing Concern's Stock.

NEW ISSUE OF $25,000,000

To Be Exchanged for Other Company's Stock—Business of Concerns Not Competitive, It Is Announced.

Announcement was made yesterday by the United States Rubber Company that its Directors had entered into an agreement with a syndicate, of which Anthony N. Brady is the head, to acquire for the United States Rubber Company some 67 per cent. of the stock of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company. To this end the stockholders of the United States Rubber Company are asked to authorize an issue of $15,000,000 new 8 per cent. first preferred stock and $10,000,000 second 6 per cent. non-cumulative preferred stock, making a total capitalization of the United States Rubber Company of $75,000,000. A special meeting of the stockholders has been called for May 25 to vote on the issue.

The acquisition of the Rubber Goods securities by the United States Rubber Company is the result, according to the official circular accompanying the notice to stockholders, of a realization on the part of the Directors of the latter that the operations of the two companies are supplementary rather than competitive, and might profitably be carried on in conjunction with each other. The circular declares that the investigation of the affairs of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company has shown that its earnings are sufficient to take care of the dividends on both classes of the new stock of the United States Rubber and to have something over toward paying a dividend on the common stock of the United States Rubber Company, which has not been on a dividend basis since 1900.

At considerable detail the circular discusses the reasons that led the Directors of the United States Rubber Company to decide upon the acquisition of the Rubber Goods control by the means proposed, it being said that the stock increase was preferred to an issue of collateral trust notes because the latter would put a fixed charge ahead of the stock of all classes, whereas the stock increase would "not only give assurance of stability in value to the preferred stock, but would hold out reasonable expectations of an increase in the value of the common."

It is proposed to obtain all of the common stock of the Rubber Goods and "a very moderate amount of the preferred," allowing for the latter, which closed yesterday at 108½, par for par in the new first preferred stock, and for the former, which closed at 37 yesterday, 60 per cent. of its par value in second preferred. There is $16,941,700 of the common stock of the Rubber Goods Company outstanding, which would require virtually all of the new second preferred and $8,051,400 of the Rubber Goods preferred outstanding. The circular does not specify the amount of this to be acquired. The circular points out that the interests of the Rubber Goods stockholders will not be injured, as the present preferred, a 7 per cent. stock, will be exchanged for an 8 per cent. issue, while the common, which now pays no dividends, will be exchanged for a stock bearing 6 per cent.

Directors of the United States Rubber Company having no interest in the syndicate but constituting a quorum, the announcement says, have adopted resolutions recommending the proposed acquisition and have authorized the execution of a conditional contract with the syndicate, authorizing it to sell to the United States Rubber Company not less than two-thirds of the stock of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company. The price at which Mr. Brady's syndicate, which includes President Charles H. Dale of the Rubber Goods, acquired the stock, is not given. Neither is the date on which Mr. Brady became dominant in the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company, which was formerly controlled by James R. Keene.

NAN PATTERSON AT HOME.

Cheered by a Crowd on Her Arrival in Washington.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Nan Patterson, accompanied by her father and Mr. and Mrs. J. Morgan Smith, arrived in Washington from New York at 7:20 o'clock this morning, and the party at once drove to the Patterson home on Columbia Heights.

A crowd of curious persons had awaited the arrival of the train at the Pennsylvania station, and as the carriage started several persons cheered. Arrived at the corner of the street adjacent to the Patterson residence, Miss Patterson sprang from the vehicle and ran down the block. She stopped for a moment to hug relatives who had advanced to meet her, then ran up the steps of her home to greet her mother.

Her father said that although many flattering offers of engagements had come to her, none had been considered. "She will remain at home and take a good rest; after that she will take up the question of the future," he explained.

CARNEGIE BUILDING PLANS.

Design of Gift to Associated Engineers Made Public.

Plans have been filed with Building Superintendent Hopper for a fifteen-story building to cost $975,000, which Andrew Carnegie is to present to the Associated Societies of Engineers of New York, of which A. R. Ledoux is President. It is to be erected on the large plot from 25 to 32 West Thirty-ninth Street, and immediately adjoining it in the rear, facing at 32 and 34 West Fortieth Street, will be a thirteen-story clubhouse, which is to cost an additional $375,000, and which is also part of Mr. Carnegie's gift.

The Thirty-ninth Street building will be a fireproof edifice, 212 feet high, with a frontage of 115 feet and a depth of 88.9 feet. It is to be of the French Renaissance style, and will be lighted by five rows of tall, decorated windows, paneled in bronze. The entrance will be adorned with giant doors of decorated bronze. The façade is to be of granite and limestone, trimmed with terra cotta.

HABEAS CORPUS FOR HALE.

Tobacco Trust Witness Obtains Writ Returnable May 24.

A writ of habeas corpus was issued in Albany on Friday night by Judge Wallace of the United States Circuit Court in behalf of Edwin F. Hale. Mr. Hale refused to answer questions put to him by the Federal Grand Jury in the Tobacco Trust inquiry now being conducted in this city by the Department of Justice. Judge Lacombe adjudged him to be in contempt and he was nominally taken into custody by United States Marshal Henkel.

Argument on the writ of habeas corpus will be heard by Judge Wallace on May 24 in the United States Circuit Court in this city.

CITIZENS' UNION IN DOUBT.

Sentiment Within It for McClellan Said to be Growing.

At the meeting of the Citizens' Union City Committee to-morrow evening the attitude that organization will assume in the coming municipal campaign will be considered. It is understood that R. Fulton Cutting, who recently suggested that the Union communicate with the Tammany General Committee to see if an understanding could not be reached which might enable the Union to indorse Mayor McClellan, will offer as a compromise a proposition that the Citizen's Union publish a formal letter to all of the political and civic organizations in the city asking them to submit suggestions to the Citizens' Union with respect to candidates. This will enable Tammany, in the same way as other organizations, to appeal for the indorsement of the Citizens' Union if its leaders deem such a course advisable.

Sentiment in the Citizens' Union in favor of Mayor McClellan is said to be strong enough to prevent the passage of any resolution having for its object a coalition between the Union and the Republicans. The probability is that the Union will adopt a middle course.

Republican politicians were predicting yesterday that this programme would result in the nomination of at least three tickets. Their opinion was that the Republican organization would rather face defeat than put itself in the light of a suppliant for Citizens' Union indorsement.

Charles Stewart Smith, member of the Rapid Transit Board, former President of the Chamber of Commerce and a prominent Republican, yesterday declared in favor of the renomination and re-election of Mayor McClellan. Mr. Smith said:

"Mayor McClellan is a fine type of man, and has given the city a fine administration. He is a business man, and believes that the affairs of the city should be conducted on business principles. New York will be fortunate if it can secure four years more of McClellan. I hope that he will be renominated and re-elected.
